The IMPROPER

A City's Pride

Like any magazine, The Improper has its share of editorial quirks. Some are piddly—the Portland font, disdain for the serial comma, a fanatical adherence to headline puns. Others are more essential, like the choice, year after year, to put an industrial-strength celebrity on the cover of the Boston's Best issue. Except this year was different.

After the events of the Marathon, we debated how to commemorate the heroism of the first responders. Countless individual acts of selflessness took place that week, but it would have been visually graceless (to say nothing of uncomfortable) to squeeze countless people into a 9 × 10.875-inch cover photo. We could, though, photograph a small group of professional first responders and bystanders who—by tying tourniquets, taking charge at medical stations, helping carry victims to safety—represented Boston's courage, compassion and decency. The best qualities of our city. And we could honor that group by doubling the photograph's scope with a special gatefold cover.

The shoot took place on a pristine Sunday in a studio off Route 128. Despite the cloudless sky and the lazy heat of the morning, most of our staff showed up. They simply wanted to be present, to shake hands and to thank some of the regular Bostonians who had earned our gratitude that day in April. To say they had met some real VIPs.

This cover is our way of giving thanks to all the people who proved themselves Boston's best.

BOSTON'S July Fourth celebration seems as rooted in history as the Declaration of Independence, but the Hatch Shell spectacular hasn't always followed the same script. David G. Mugar, the man who first envisioned mixing Tchaikovsky with riverside fireworks nearly 40 years ago, says this year's changes—to pace and place—will make the show more enjoyable.

Mugar, executive producer of the Boston Pops Fireworks Spectacular, and other local organizers have regained more control over the show after CBS opted to not renew its deal, leaving only a local broadcast this year. Bostonians can expect fewer awkward commercial breaks, and fireworks will launch nearly an hour earlier. In addition to program changes, Mugar says concertgoers should be prepared for heightened security measures on the Esplanade. The suspects in the Boston Marathon bombings reportedly had plans to attack Boston on July Fourth, and many security experts have been brought in to help keep the event safe.

"It's going to be the safest place in town," Mugar vows.

It will certainly be the most popular place in town, thanks to a late 1973 conversation Mugar had with Pops conductor Arthur Fiedler about changing the annual concert, which was dealing with declining attendance. "I said, 'I've got an idea. If you play the 1812 Overture, I'll try to find some cannons and some live church bells in the area... And what do you think of the idea of throwing some fireworks in at the end of it?'" Mugar recalls.

The show attracted 75,000 people the first year in 1974, and during the bicentennial two years later, it gained national prominence with Walter Cronkite and CBS News. The event hasn't skipped a beat since.

"When you create an event that is happening live on the Esplanade for 400,000 people," Mugar says, "and you have Cronkite saying, 'It was the highlight of a day marked by crescendos,' you say to yourself, 'Wow, I really did something.'"

MATT MARTINELLI

The full Boston Pops Fourth of July Fireworks Spectacular concert will be broadcast on WBZ-TV Channel 4 from 7 pm to 10 pm on July Fourth. It will be broadcast on WBZ-AM from 6 pm to 10 pm.

Good Eats

Marrow Minded

Barcelona Restaurant & Wine Bar, the latest addition to Washington Square's appealing restaurant row, serves roasted bone marrow as a frequent special (call ahead to confirm availability). That's nothing new for a tapas joint, but these canoe-cut bones, freshened with parsley and lemon zest, come with a worthwhile upgrade. For an extra $5, order a "bone luge": Once you've scraped out most of the marrow, tip the bone up to your mouth and wait for the server to pour a shot of Lustau's East India Solera down the chute. The bright sherry picks up bits of creamy fat along the way and goes down smooth.

NO SPAIN, NO GAIN

TABERNA TABS: The Brookline eatery's bar menu is revamped.

WHEN DEBORAH HANSEN opened Taberna de Haro in Brookline in 1998, veal sweetbreads were offered only as a special, and the pâté plate was just that: a plate of pâté. Now those sweetbreads are on the menu every day, and the pâté plate has morphed into a celebration of Spanish charcuterie, with house-cured meats ranging from lamb bacon to chorizo and blood sausage, plus house-pickled vegetables.

Pâté plate

Much has changed in 15 years: In 2007 Hansen bought out her husband's share of the restaurant after they parted ways, and last year she expanded her space and added a full bar. She's built a list of 320 wines, all from Spain, which she says is "one of the largest all-Spanish wine lists in the country. My goal is to have it be the biggest."

Success hasn't come without a few bumps: Hansen is lowering bar prices on beer and cocktails "drastically, by about 20 percent," she says, because she started out too high. "A bar is a whole new animal to me, but if you don't grow, you get left behind," she adds.

Out in Newton, 51 Lincoln chef/owner Jeffrey Fournier has overhauled his menu with help from his new chef de cuisine, Nate Gibson, who previously served as sous chef at Fournier's Waban Kitchen. No need to fear: The famous "watermelon steak" is still on the menu. On the roof, the garden is flourishing, providing most of the produce used in the restaurant, and Fournier plans to use the later-summer harvest to promote Raw August, which will feature "internationally influenced raw cuisine." It's too hot to cook in August anyway.

TAKE ROOT

There's an interesting culture in Allston's Union Square. When Peace o' Pie disappeared over the winter, there was an opportunity to alter the character of the corner that's become known for its veg-friendly businesses. Deena Jalal and Hin Tang, owners of alternative ice cream shop FoMu and the forthcoming Root, weren't ready for that landscape to change.

"Maintaining the integrity of the veg-centric legacy that is Union Square, that was really a lot of our rationale for taking over that space," Jalal says. "It was becoming that corner, and we hated seeing that go." This month, Root, a plant-based restaurant and juice bar, joins the lineup where Brighton Avenue and Cambridge Street meet. But don't call it a vegan restaurant.

"I'm not interested in how people define the way they eat," Jalal says. "Everyone has their own food philosophy. It's more about showcasing the natural deliciousness and simplicity that earth-sourced food can [have]."

At Root, everything but the bread (which comes from Iggy's) will be made from scratch. There are almost as many sauces as there are items on the menu, and each, including the ketchup variations, is made in-house. Small bites include sweet corn–and-jalapeno hush puppies and a sweet potato, kale and caramelized onion quesadilla, sans processed cheese. Kraft singles aren't part of the Root food philosophy. But curried quinoa and chickpea or roasted beet and fennel salads? Those fit right in. The burger has a black bean and quinoa base ("It's really more of a vegetable medley," Jalal says) topped with butter lettuce, tomato, crispy onions and house aioli and ketchup.

On weekends, the 20-seat space transforms into a sit-down restaurant for brunch, which includes flaky biscuits topped with portobello mushroom gravy, Liège waffles (with a crunch and chewiness derived from the yeast-raised batter) and pancakes, fruit compotes and vegan donuts.

To wash it down, there are made-to-order juices that follow the traditional model (beet, sweet potato, orange, etc.) and also branch off into more unusual variations, such as a blend of green apple, cucumber, agave and water—served in a Mason jar, of course.

"I'm trying to be deliberate in not defining the food or defining the customer, because I hate when people do that to me," Jalal says. "At the end of the day, delicious food is delicious food, and we're really just trying to showcase how naturally delicious it can be. And that's it."

Q&A

QUICK ON THE DRAWL

Jason Isbell performs his new album Southeastern at the Sinclair on July 29.

How would you describe the Southeast?

Very hot right now. And humid. But the food is good, and the people are friendly, and I like it. It's home.

A lot of your songs are deeply personal. Are you ever nervous about how an audience will receive them?

Not the audience so much as my family and the people closest to me. Sometimes it's hard to let those folks hear them, especially if they're in there, you know? The audience doesn't always recognize exactly who you're singing about, in part because I don't usually write one song to, or about, one person. I usually combine more than one person into the characters that I write into the songs, but still, if you're writing about somebody, they usually figure it out pretty quickly. So yeah, sometimes that's a little nerve-wracking, but usually people like it if you've written a song about them, no matter what you say.

So many of your songs have the essence of bars, drunken tales and lost souls. Does sobriety have an influence on how you write songs now?

I don't really think that drinking or not drinking had much of an effect on my creative abilities, but I think that I was just less able to focus on what I was doing before. Now, I'm not spending five or six hours getting drunk every night and two, three or four hours getting over a hangover the next day. I actually have a full day to work on what I'm doing, and it's helped me.

Has it had any effect on performing live?

That was really tough because [alcohol] does cut the nerves, so, for the first little while, I had a hard time not being nervous and anxious on stage. Now I feel a lot more confident in my own abilities to perform throughout the show. In the old days, I think we were always good, but by the end of the night, I was pretty drunk. So now I feel like I start off strong and end strong.

Try Cycle

In the adrenaline-fueled world of group exercise classes, cycling's popularity continues to spin out of control. Keeping pace with Los Angeles and New York (but without the attitude that allows some studios to charge $3,500 for 50 classes—that's $70 a pop), Boston is finally en vogue. Give it a whirl at these area studios that come in at the head of the pack.

Spynergy Cycling Studio
Pedal Pushing Since: 2005 Solo Ride: $18 Class Notes: New spinners can take a free trial ride in one of three intro courses each week, while seasoned vets may choose more demanding interval-training classes. In addition to motivational music and video productions, Spynergy hosts rides with themes like Downton Abbey or Bruce Springsteen. The Extra Mile: There's a mobile app to reserve one of the 45 bikes, as classes often fill up quickly. Owners Bill Pryor and Alex Klemmer also offer a consulting service for those interested in starting their own businesses.

The Handle Bar
Pedal Pushing Since: 2013 Solo Ride: $20 Class Notes: The studio requires cycling shoes to promote stability (they can be rented for $2), and the 30 bikes feature weighted handlebars for an added arm workout, packing in maximum burn during the 45-minute class. The Extra Mile: To build playlists that would keep clients inspired, owner Jess Bashelor consulted students at Berklee College of Music and local musicians before opening last month. She also plans to bring in live DJs to spin tunes once a month.

READY TO JAM

The latest addition to the Central Square Wednesday Market comes from Dan Greenspan, devotee of a Belgian-style bread called desem. A couple of years ago the jazz musician started tinkering with a formula for this naturally fermented, whole-wheat sourdough loaf, which he originally discovered at a Vermont bakery. Now he produces Dan's Brick Oven Bread in a custom-built wood-fired oven in his New Hampshire home. The result of his experiments is a dark, deeply crusted round with robust tang and a dense crumb that makes great sandwich material, but needs nothing more than a thick spread of salty butter.

Drink of the Moment

SOMETHING BLUE

NAME: Blueberry Thyme Collins

PRICE: $10

INVENTOR: Legal Sea Foods director of bar operations Kara Kukull.

INGREDIENTS: Cold River Blueberry Vodka, Marie Brizard Apry, blueberries, thyme, lemon, soda.

TASTE: A good collins shouldn't drown in syrup, and this one's crisp, not cloying. Cold River is a gently flavored potato vodka from Maine that's crafted for nuance, not a lollipop kick, and a light hand on the Apry keeps the apricot flavor subdued, but present enough to add body to the blueberries. An herbal component from the thyme enlivens the finish. Playful but adult, this is an ideal hammock drink.

TIMELINESS: "When we think about cocktail menus," Kukull says, "we think seasonal. Blueberries are getting to their peak of flavor."

APPEAL: Berries. Citrus. Bubbles. "The No. 1 thing that drives our bar program is the flavors that guests look for walking in the door," Kukull says.

ALTERNATES: Sangria is the biggest seller (note the strawberry version), but ask for the hibiscus margarita. Mezcal lends it an unexpected whiff of smoke.

TELLING DETAIL: Legal's bar program is evolved enough to feature its own house gin, distilled especially for Massachusetts locations by Berkshire Mountain Distillers. It tones down the customary juniper in favor of pepper and citrus.

PAIR IT WITH: An arugula, baby greens, radicchio and romaine salad with Dijon mustard and balsamic vinaigrette and grilled salmon. The bitter notes of the greens plays off the drink's herbal notes. Or opt for fish tacos dressed with a salsa that's robust enough to stand up to the drink's fruit.

TRAIN IN VAIN

TO THE MAN WHO ASKED ME OUT ON THE T ON MY WAY TO WORK: I have to commend you for your bravery. You asked me out on a same-day date—a risky endeavor, seeing as that makes you look a little too eager. Despite this, I accepted. My mistake. Your incessant rambling about guns, architecture and religion was excellent first-date conversation. Beautifully done. At the end of the date, you asked for a kiss. I refused. You pouted like a 4-year-old while we walked back to the T. The train arrived; you stood up, gave me a hug and, in front of an entire train full of intoxicated individuals, cupped my butt. Thank you—that's my favorite way to end a date.

Feeling bummed

To the million-dollar man: Thank you kindly for sharing the wealth not once, but twice after winning big on the two scratch tickets I sold you. Your gentlemanly gesture did not go unnoticed. Not only did you brighten up my otherwise lackluster afternoon stuck at work, but you inspired me to finally go grocery shopping for that pound of salmon I had been lusting after.

Lucky lady behind the counter

To the individual(s) shooting off fireworks behind my apartment: It is not July 4 yet. I don't want to say I hate you, because I don't know you, but setting off fireworks at 1:45 am on a Tuesday seems like a pretty legitimate reason for hatred. I have to be up at 6 am every day, and your festive display is a real interruption to my sleep cycle. On behalf of the South End, shut up.

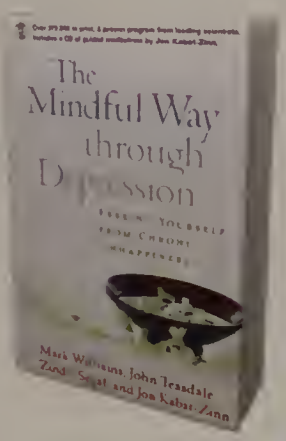
HERE AND NOW



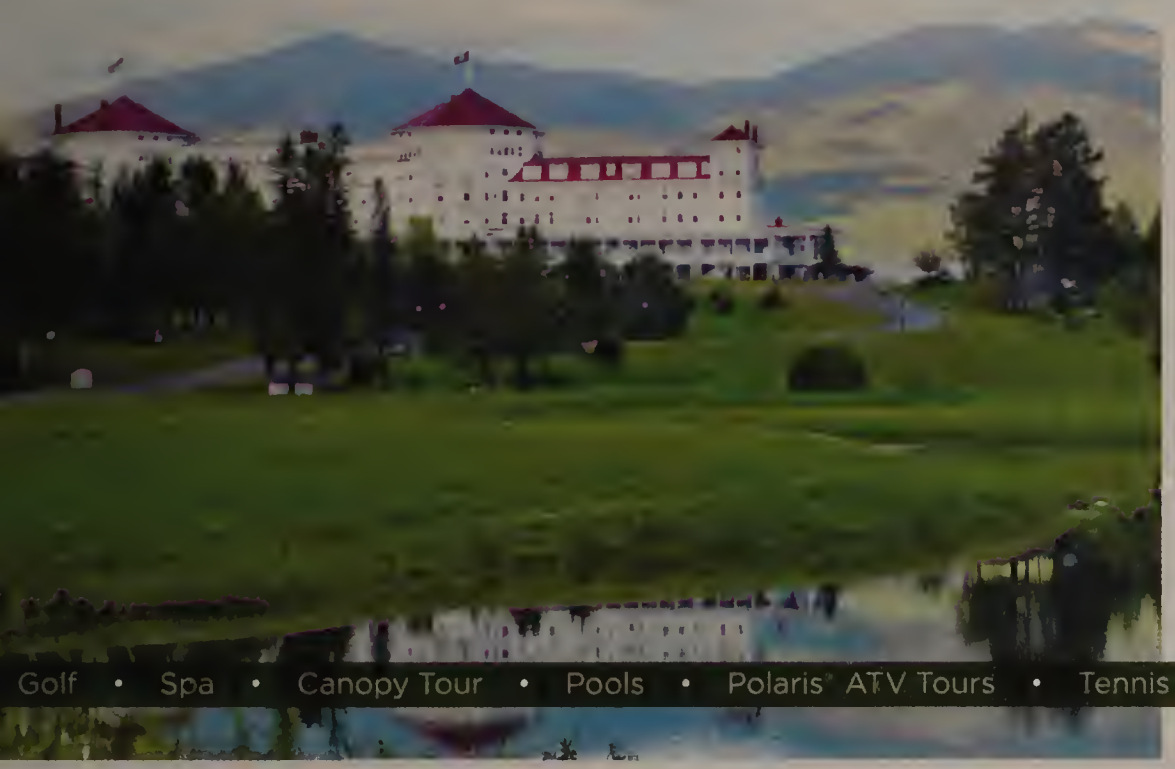
A guide to escaping the downward spiral of negativity

MINDFULNESS—A SISTER of sorts to meditation—is a seemingly complex, yet actually simple approach to soothing the beast of suffering. Jon Kabat-Zinn walks us, almost as if we were on clouds, through the ethos, notions and specific steps of mindfulness.

We're invited to breathe in calming ways while we observe our thoughts—growly ones, everyday annoying ones or those of actual depression—as if we're standing on a riverbank, watching a flowing stream. The idea is not to "do" anything, just to "be." This semi-trance-like equanimity not only makes it possible to see and let go of our thoughts and feelings, but to "breathe into" (not away from) our darker feelings without being overwhelmed by them.

The Mindful Way Through Depression: Freeing Yourself From Chronic Unhappiness
By Mark Williams, John Teasdale, Zindel Segal and Jon Kabat-Zinn

Kabat-Zinn is professor emeritus of medicine at the University of Massachusetts Medical School.



Mindfulness conceives of thoughts not as hard facts, but rather as constructs—soft, shifting hypotheses to be lightly observed, not grabbed onto as absolute truths.

The recommended spirit is one of curiosity, openness, a state in which we can "befriend" difficult thoughts. The authors encourage positive engagement, even in small tasks: Eat a raisin, infinitely slowly, and note its sparkly wrinkles and sudden sweetness. Another important route is the body scan in which we take an experiential tour of our entire body, focusing on our weight and warmth and shape in the glistening present. ×××

"Jacob found that he could label the whole critical, judgmental package as 'Critical Mind.' Once he had done that, he was able to look out for the visits of Critical Mind and greet it as an old, if not wholly welcome, acquaintance. This enabled Jacob to let Critical Mind come and go, without giving it the power to trigger the cascade of negative thoughts that would normally have quickly mired him in the negativity with which he was already so familiar."

ASK CHERYL

Q: WHAT DO YOU RECOMMEND FOR SUNSCREEN?

A: I founded SkinHealth 14 years ago when my sister died of melanoma, the most deadly form of skin cancer, at the age of 40.

I am a firm believer in a physical block, such as micronized zinc oxide, as opposed to chemical blocks, which must be reapplied often. I recommend a broad spectrum UVA/UVB sunscreen that has a SPF of 30 or more, and contains at least 5% micronized zinc oxide to protect against UVA rays, which are the most dangerous rays. Zinc oxide creates a physical barrier to the radiation and deflects it from your skin. Our SkinHealth formulations are invisible on the skin.

It is very important to read the label on sunscreens to determine the amount of zinc oxide in the product. If the percentage of zinc oxide is not listed, then there is most likely not enough in the product to be effective.

At SkinHealth we have created a variety of sunscreens that have a high SPF and contain between 5% to 17% zinc oxide. These are invisible on the skin, water resistant, and unlike many other sunscreens, contain no fragrance and are not greasy.

Please stop in to a SkinHealth Center and select a sunscreen that is right for you.

HOT PURSUIT

The Heat ★★½

Starring Sandra Bullock, Melissa McCarthy, Demian Bichir, Marlon Wayans, Michael Rapaport, Nathan Corddry and Jane Curtin. Written by Katie Dippold. Directed by Paul Feig.

SET THE DELOREAN FOR 1986, and you just might have a grand old time with The Heat, a lo-fi buddy-cop comedy that tweaks the time-honored formula ever so slightly by replacing Mel Gibson and Danny Glover with Melissa McCarthy and Sandra Bullock. For the first half-hour or so, I thought it was gearing up to be one of the worst movies I have ever seen, but eventually it grew on me.

I just don't find Melissa McCarthy as funny as it seems the rest of the world does. I think she's abrasive; she reminds me of that lady at your local liquor store who smokes the extra-long cigarettes and wears that carpal tunnel sleeve all the time to try to get out of work. It's probably a matter of personal taste, but I've never responded well to comedians who work too hard at being amusing—in Jim Carrey, Jack Black, Robin Williams and Will Ferrell, all I read is desperation. The bigger and louder they go, the more I resent them for pleading so hard. Great comedy looks effortless and is elegant. As an old deodorant commercial said, never let them see you sweat.

McCarthy sweats hard during the early [illegible] The Heat. Sandra Bullock's uppity, [illegible] FBI agent Ashburn is assigned to [illegible] Boston drug [illegible] and wastes no time [illegible] and annoying t[illegible] local fuzz. McCarthy's troublesome detective Mullins takes a pause from passing out face-down at her favorite dive bar to register offense. The movie's early scenes are bloody awful, with the loosey-goosey Bullock trying to come off as starchy while McCarthy bellows, hollers and bangs into a lot of walls. I really hated it.

> Bullock puts on an alpha anal-retentive front, but deep down inside she can't wait to start swearing and drinking at lunch.

Maybe some of this can be attributed to Stockholm syndrome, but I eventually started warming up to The Heat. Once Bullock and McCarthy exhaust the required "we're supposed to loathe each other because the screenplay says so" routines and finally become friends, the movie is allowed to kick loose and start subverting macho-cop movie clichés. There's some great sisterhood stuff here in the second half, after everybody takes it down a notch.

When he was in town last month, director Paul Feig confessed that the movie's inspiration came to Parks and Recreation writer Katie Dippold while watching the 1986 cable staple Running Scared, which starred Billy Crystal and Gregory Hines as a couple of mismatched Chicago detectives stumbling onto a totally unremarkable mystery and bantering their way through a brisk two hours. That film played on HBO ad nauseum throughout the entirety of my childhood. Dippold wondered why they couldn't do this again, except with women, and the director of Bridesmaids found his follow-up project.

It's easy to forget what a gifted comedian Sandra Bullock can be, probably because her movies are often terrible. But she's a real treat here, clomping around, condescending to everybody, with a badly placed barrette in her hair. It's only through prolonged exposure to McCarthy's foul-mouthed, usually hammered detective that we begin to see cracks in the facade. Bullock puts on an alpha anal-retentive front, but deep down inside she can't wait to start swearing and drinking at lunch.

The detective story is almost an afterthought, but I guess it's something involving McCarthy's brother (Michael Rapaport) and one of those fabled shipments that's supposed to arrive at a certain time to make sure that all the movie's set pieces take place after hours in an abandoned warehouse. Since every movie climax during the Reagan administration took place after hours in an abandoned warehouse, they might as well do it again here for continuity's sake.

Feig is a very rudimentary director, at least as far as visuals go. But he really seems to like his characters, and Bullock and McCarthy grow from broad caricatures to specific creations. The sometimes comical indifference to plot development allows for some delightful asides: There's a bender that goes on for days (in ways only Hollywood thinks Boston bars would allow), and no better moment than when the overachieving Bullock performs an emergency tracheotomy on a guy choking at Denny's. (The Heimlich would have sufficed.)

On one hand The Heat is a throwaway movie, putting a distaff spin on pictures that probably weren't all that great in the first place. But formulas become formulas for a reason: because they work. This will play forever on cable. ✖✖✖

Music { PAUL ROBICHEAU }

PIECE OF MIND

Tedeschi Trucks Band plays the Bank of America Pavilion July 30 and Aug. 6.

"THE COOL THING ABOUT music," Susan Tedeschi says, "is you never know what kind of situations it can bring to you."

That's certainly true for the Norwell-bred singer/guitarist, who grew from jamming with local blues players to a fruitful solo career that spawned Grammy accolades as well as stage turns with Grateful Dead survivors and the Allman Brothers Band, whose guitarist Derek Trucks is her husband. With their Tedeschi Trucks Band, she even played for President Obama last year at the White House on a bill that included Mick Jagger and B.B. King.

So the soul-blues singer wasn't necessarily surprised when she was invited to headline the Boston Pops' annual July 4 celebration at the Hatch Shell on the Esplanade.

"It's pretty surreal, I'll tell you that," says Tedeschi, 42. "When I went to college [at Berklee], I was right up the street, so we could see the fireworks and hear the music. I wasn't right there, because in order to go, I knew you had to get there early, and I never had a whole day. I remember watching it on television and thinking how amazing it was."

Luckily, the Pops concert falls between two tours with the Tedeschi Trucks Band, which releases its second studio album, Made Up Mind, on Aug. 20. She's been asked by the Pops to showcase material from that album, a sharp difference from her previous orchestra experience in 2002, performing covers at a star-studded Walden Woods benefit in Los Angeles with Joni Mitchell, Stevie Nicks and Norah Jones.

Made Up Mind cranks the Tedeschi Trucks Band up a notch as a cohesive 10-piece outfit (plus a rotating bassist since the departure of Oteil Burbridge). The seeds for the band were sown some five years ago in Soul Stew Revival, a similarly sized ensemble that mixed tunes from the Derek Trucks Band and Tedeschi's solo catalogues with roadhouse rock, R&B and blues covers. But TTB shuffled both players and concept.

"With this new band, it's all about writing and having its own sound," Tedeschi says of TTB, which hits Bank of America Pavilion on July 30 and Aug. 6 with the Black Crowes. "The chemistry all just came together. We tried a lot of different people, and it was very apparent who was right. Then, once we did have the 11-piece, it was hard to go back."

The band includes Derek Trucks Band/Soul Stew holdovers Kofi Burbridge on keyboards and flute and Mike Mattison, who teams with Mark Rivers to support Tedeschi with hearty vocals. The horn section of Kebbi Williams (sax), Maurice Brown (trumpet) and Saunders Sermons (trombone, vocals) lends more versatility, while J.J. Johnson and Tyler Greenwell serve as dual drummers, reminiscent of the Dead and Allman Brothers tandems.

"In a way, it's sort of organically coming out of that world," Tedeschi says. It was a case where she and Trucks had each picked a drummer they wanted for the project. "It so happens that we had them come down to the house to play together, and they connected so well that it was seamless."

The couple's house in Jacksonville, Fla., became a hub for the band during the process of writing and recording the new album in their home studio. "There's a lot of luxury of convenience for creativity to flow naturally," she says. "If we're not feeling it, we can step away. We can go to the beach."

In turn, Made Up Mind sounds bolder than TTB's Grammy-winning 2011 debut Revelator, from Trucks' assertive slide-guitar flights and Tedeschi's full-throated vocals to the rest of the group's contributions. For Revelator, she says, "there was a lot of politeness going on, but now that we're more comfortable as a unit, it's understanding everyone's strengths and trying to do things that show off the band more."

And the new album's title track embodies this headstrong independence. "I kind of weirdly interpret it as you've changed your way of living," Tedeschi says, "whether it's for a relationship or even a job. Or you could look at it in a religious way, like 'I've got a made-up mind; I'm going to a higher place.'" ×××

On dinner parties past

A soiree sight

I LOVE TO GO TO DINNER PARTIES. We all do, partially because we all love to be in other people's houses, to see what they have, what's on their walls, their bookshelves (if they have books). How they live their lives. The dinner party in America has been a disappearing institution in the past several decades. It's been challenged by Boston becoming a real foodie town with new restaurants popping up everywhere and by home entertaining becoming too expensive and, for working couples, involving too much time. But when it works, it's worth the effort.

At a recent dinner party in Cambridge, 12 people who mostly did not know one another gathered around the guest of honor, a New Yorker writer who held forth on various topics, from food and the Middle East to politics and mystery writers, and so much more. Guests engaged with him and with one another while dining on exquisite crispy duck and a vegetable risotto created by our brilliant hostess, Judith Barrett, author of Pasta Verde and co-author of the classic Risotto. And no one asked us during dinner, "Are you still working on that?"

Of course, not all dinner parties are perfect, but the ones that are quirky or frightening can be even more memorable, much more than restaurant experiences. Early in my marriage, many of our other married friends had little or no money, but entertained in their apartments with low budgets and high enthusiasm. Years ago, dinner parties involved games as well as conversation and gustatory treats. My favorite hostess back then lived in a fourth-floor walk-up on Beacon Hill. She would traipse to Haymarket on party day and buy all the lowest-end cuts of meat and black beans to make a killer chili, accompanied by Mexican beer and Spanish red rotgut. The political and cultural arguments would ebb and flow and end with charades or playwriting contests. She and her husband, an irreverent lawyer, entertained us so much that my wife and I began a small annual tradition to thank them: a black-tie oyster and Champagne party, with the only food being a small salad and baked oysters casino. At the time, it never occurred to me that people would want to eat anything else—or that if they could have Champagne they would want to drink anything else. The guests were all close friends, or involved in publishing. My first novel had come out, and I was still in that weird glow, thinking nothing but good was going to come out of it. Fame and fortune. After several hours of merriment, many oysters, many flutes down the hatch, one of the guests asked, "Can I see you in private for a bit?"

"Sure," I said.

The man was the editor-in-chief of a publishing house. He was a shade older than me, and a name in that world. When we were alone in my tiny study, he said to me: "I really hated your book. And your writing. Do you think you could see your way to loaning me $100?" This was in my house, and he was very drunk. If I were Ernest Hemingway, I would have clubbed him in the jaw or tossed him out the window. But I think I did something crueler. I wrote him a check and smiled. Sometimes it can be a challenge to be above it all. I handed him the check and said, "This is a story I can tell for years, a character study."

My wife was fond of saying, "This will end in tears," at key moments, and she said it to me that night. And for him it eventually did, in several ways. I learned many lessons that night, and one of them was this: If you invite people to a dinner party, make sure they get some real food.

In 1969 there was a movie called Bob & Carol & Ted & Alice. It was about wife swapping. In that era of new theories about love, the "open marriage" was one widely trumpeted. Swingers' parties and places like Plato's Retreat in New York became popular. One memorable dinner party I attended included several guests who wandered off with different partners. It ended in insults, threats, apologies and shoving contests, not to mention multiple divorces and stories that still resonate. This was back in the era of hot-tub parties; a friend told me about evenings in a suburb next to Arlington in which people played "The Game." This involved many gin martinis (gin seems to fuel bad behavior). After the drinks, the lights went out and everyone undressed and tossed all their clothes in a pile. Then, on a signal, still in the dark, people grabbed one another's clothes, threw them on before the lights flickered on and... men in panties, women in ties. Scrabble, anyone?

This year, the start of summer brought me to several dinner parties. Ideas, not games, were the focus, and the food was simple and classic. Swordfish on the grill one night, chicken pot pie the next. These parties were long on affordable wines, short on the hard stuff, except for one gregarious giant of a man who kept grabbing for the handle of the large bottle of Mount Gay rum. The conversation ranged from favorite books to beach erosion, to local and national politics, to recent visits to Spain and Greece, and the consensus on these troubled lands was that "from the city restaurants, shops, taverns, harbors, you could never tell that life was changing." There were the inevitable details of children and nonprofit organizations, and piping plovers, and Pippin, and toasts aplenty, to friends present and absent. These parties were comfortable and happy.

Driving home, I remembered a night long ago when a dinner guest at our house played a CD of Neil Diamond singing "Cracklin' Rosie." He lip-synched and danced around on the ground floor, ending with a big split, like a beefy ballerina. After that, people dispersed. I walked several of the guests to the end of my driveway. One of them, a quirky guy and one of the best squash players in Boston, gave me a bear hug. Then, for some reason, he bit me on the cheek and drew blood.

They don't throw dinner parties like they used to. ✖✖✖

GIVING MY BEST

I deserve a few awards, too.

EACH YEAR, I HELP CREATE this authoritative tome known as the Boston's Best issue. And while I enjoy bestowing recognition upon others, I sometimes feel that an important person is left out of the discussion: me. Thus I've decided to give myself a few awards, in recognition of my own great recent accomplishments. And while there is no award for Best Gimmick to Structure a Column, I think we all know who would win it.

Best Injury

My Back, After Being Attacked by a Dog Because I Was Dancing

The larger of our two dogs is a gentle Labrador retriever who will benignly lie on the floor while toddlers crawl all over him and poke him in the eyes. But damn, does he hate when people dance. His former owners must've been abusive theater folk, because the moment he witnesses dancing he attacks like a German shepherd in a police training exercise. ("Down, Panzer! Release! He's already dead!")

So we're flipping channels when we come to So You Think You Can Dance, and I suggest that we should create a show called So You Think You Can Dance While Getting Attacked by a Dog. We have the dog sit on the couch like a judge, and I walk out and start dancing. On cue, the dog leaps off the couch and takes me down in a blur of fur and snarling. As I hit the floor, my upper back awkwardly twists and makes a disturbing popping noise.

For the next few days, I can't move my head or neck without a blast of pain radiating across my shoulder blades. I consider seeing a doctor or chiropractor, but then I'd have to tell a medical professional that I hurt myself pretending to be on a reality dance show where people are attacked by dogs. It's possible that I need to get out more on weeknights.

Best Piece of Mail

PriMedia's Oopsie

The other day I got home from a trip and discovered a piece of mail from PriMedia, a company that I haven't worked for since 2007. The enclosed letter began, "We recently discovered that the theft of a computer storage device from our headquarters may have resulted in the exposure of some of your personal information." Which of course means that it definitely resulted in the exposure of my personal information.

What came next was a tale of high-stakes digital cat-and-mouse, with corrupted backup tapes, a team of computer forensics experts and, eventually, an arrest of the thief. According to PriMedia, they "do not believe he was a 'hacker' seeking the data contained on the device." The fact that they put hacker in quotation marks makes me suspect that PriMedia thinks hackers are people who chop up computers.

The letter continued, revealing that the perp did in fact get my name and social-security number. To prevent abuse of that information, PriMedia is enrolling me in an identity-protection program run by Kroll Advisory Solutions. I have mixed feelings about this, mainly because Kroll is the massive security company founded by comedian Nick Kroll's dad, and I'm irrationally jealous of anyone who's a billionaire and then also ends up hosting his own TV show. This doesn't make any sense—Nick Kroll is funny and he evidently deserves his success. But still. Nick Kroll should be out crashing cars at 4 am with Stavros Niarchos, not working hard and keeping a level head. In conclusion, I want Nick Kroll to protect my identity by standing on my lawn with a sword.

Best Move

Firing the Guy Who Cuts My Lawn

Until last year, I always considered myself a guy who cuts his own grass. There is a primal, innate urge to tame the wild and shape it to our whims, and in modern times that basic animal impulse is expressed through proper and effective use of Scotts® Turf Builder® WinterGuard® with Plus2® Weed Control. Nothing gets a woman more excited than hearing about that.

Nevertheless, I hired a landscaper on the theory that my lawn-cutting time could be applied to work, thus furthering my career while avoiding tedious labor behind the ol' Toro. This was the theory. In reality, any free time I might've gained was instead spent complaining about the landscaper—how he'd occasionally skip a week, or never trim the shrubs, or show up with the leaf blower just when I was trying to take a nap. I mean, the gall. So I fired him, which was kind of thrilling, and would've been even more so if his phone hadn't gone straight to voicemail.

My first mow in a year felt pretty good. But by the time I finished, I had what felt like a full-blown sinus infection. Apparently my histamines had become accustomed to the bourgeois, landscaper-hiring good life, in which fresh-cut grass is seldom blasted up one's nostrils by a five-horsepower Briggs & Stratton. I spent the rest of the day looking like someone who'd been hit by tear gas, but I have chosen this path and must stick to it, at least for another year or so. My oldest kid is three, and it's going to be at least that long before he can push a mower. ×××

"A city without culture is a lost city."

Soroff On TED CUTLER

The creator of the Outside the Box festival tells us about lighting Comm. Ave., promoting the arts and why he won't retire to Florida.

PHILANTHROPIST TED CUTLER, 82, WAS BORN AND RAISED IN Dorchester and graduated from Emerson College, where he's a trustee and ex-chairman of the board. A former bandleader, he founded a music agency that booked acts like Tony Bennett, Barbra Streisand and Sammy Davis Jr., and built a fortune from trade shows and corporate travel. Cutler's passion for the arts and desire to give back to the community led him and his late wife, Joan, to become two of the city's foremost philanthropists. The 1,200-seat Cutler Majestic Theatre and the Greater Boston Food Bank's headquarters are two of their greatest contributions, but they've also undertaken initiatives like paying to have the trees on the Comm. Ave. Mall wrapped in lights during the winter. Since 2007, Cutler has worked on creating Outside the Box, a nine-day festival of free music and performing arts (including a culinary side) on the Boston Common and City Hall Plaza. It runs from July 13 to 21. Cutler lives in the Back Bay.

Jonathan Soroff: On a scale from 1 to 10, how important are the arts?
Ted Cutler: A city without culture is a lost city. It's enormously important.

Outside the Box is the most ambitious arts undertaking in Boston during my lifetime. Do you think it can be sustained?
Well, that's the trick. We're a startup, but a startup doesn't really begin with 220 performances, and eight days on the Common and four days on City Hall Plaza, and a culinary festival. But in order to get people's attention, you've gotta make it very special.

What would you like to see in Boston that we don't have?
First of all, I'd like to see our theaters open all summer. There's no reason in the world why theaters in a major city should go dark for the whole summer. Second of all, I want to give an opportunity to all these wonderful arts organizations to perform in a venue that's important, with a big audience, instead of the basement of a church or what have you. So that's what Outside the Box is designed to do.

What would you say to the people who criticize Outside the Box as a vanity project?
The last thing I am is vain. I'm vain when it comes to wishing I had more hair in photos. But I don't have an ulterior motive for this. I just want to see it happen, and what's very important is that I want it to be a gift to the people of the city of Boston. They deserve it.

What would you say to the critics of the lights on Comm. Ave.?
People didn't know what to expect, and I don't blame anyone for being wary of that. But I do blame them for being negative after the fact. There was an article in the Globe where people were calling me tasteless, nouveau riche, and all of a sudden we're going to have pink flamingos in front of all our doors. But the lights on Comm. Ave. turned out to be wonderful. It's pretty. It's safer for the people to walk their dogs.

It's one of my favorite things in the winter.
I hope that's what happens with the festival. That I start it and it gets picked up by a lot of sponsors so that we can perpetuate it. The model for this is the Fringe Festival in Scotland, and they've been doing it for 50 years.

What will the economic impact be?
Enormous. To the city and the state. It will be a boon to the restaurants, the hotels and a lot of other businesses.

Do you think Boston gets adequate funding for the arts from the city or the state?
I think there's always room for improvement, and the arts bring more money to the city in terms of taxes, etc., than sports.

What do you think is the most pressing social problem in the city?
Well, what I really get a charge out of is knowing that the Food Bank feeds over a thousand people a day. We had no idea how badly it was needed.

What would Joan say if she were here?
Oh, my God. Joan would always say, "We could do more."

Where do you get your energy?
If you're devoted to something, and willing to put your time and effort into it, it's energizing. I put in a full day's work from 7 in the morning till 10 or 11 at night, and I love it.

If I can only go to one performance during the festival, what should it be?
I'd love to have you see everything. But if you want to see something new, I would opt for the evening opening on Saturday, where you'll see a group called Rhythm of the Universe, where you have over 100 different countries represented and 140 people on stage.

What was the hardest part of all this?
Getting people to understand what we're doing, because it's never been done here before. I don't think a multifaceted festival like this exists anywhere in this country.

You're a one-man Boston booster.
I love this city. I love this state. I've been friends with the mayor and the governor for years, and I think they do great work, and I want to help them do their work.

You never did the retire-to–Palm Beach thing.
With all due respect, and I know it's wonderful, Florida is just not for me. I don't start drinking until 8 o'clock, and the people there go out to dinner at 5:30.

Do you see yourself as setting an example?
I hope and pray that I'm an example for people who are able to help people who need it.

Person you most admire?
I really admire the mayor. He's always cared for the different communities and neighborhoods. He's always cared for the kids in the city. I think he's sensational. I want him to stay healthy and stay around for a long time after he leaves office.

What are you most proud of?
My family. Joan and I never told them what to do, but they saw us getting involved and they've followed in our footsteps.

So what do you hope is your legacy?

Chris Loper, 40,
general manager at Forum

After the second bomb exploded, Loper and other staff members worked together to evacuate the restaurant and bring tourniquets, towels and ice to the injured.

Betty Sparks, 56,
BAA medical-tent volunteer; operating-room nurse at Newton-Wellesley Hospital

Sparks administered IVs and applied bandages at the site of the first explosion, then helped transport victims to the medical tent.

"I will be back on duty in the finish-line medical tent again next year."

— Betty Sparks

Along with a team of physicians and nurses at the hospital, Guzman operated on patients injured by the blasts.

Rachel McGuire, 31, Boston police officer

Seen in the iconic image on the cover of Sports Illustrated, McGuire was on duty, performing security at the finish line, when the first bomb exploded. She helped evacuate the area and secure the crime scene.

"It's the warm that builds the strength of each individual."

Fran Damian, 51, director of nursing/patient services at Boston Children's Hospital's emergency department

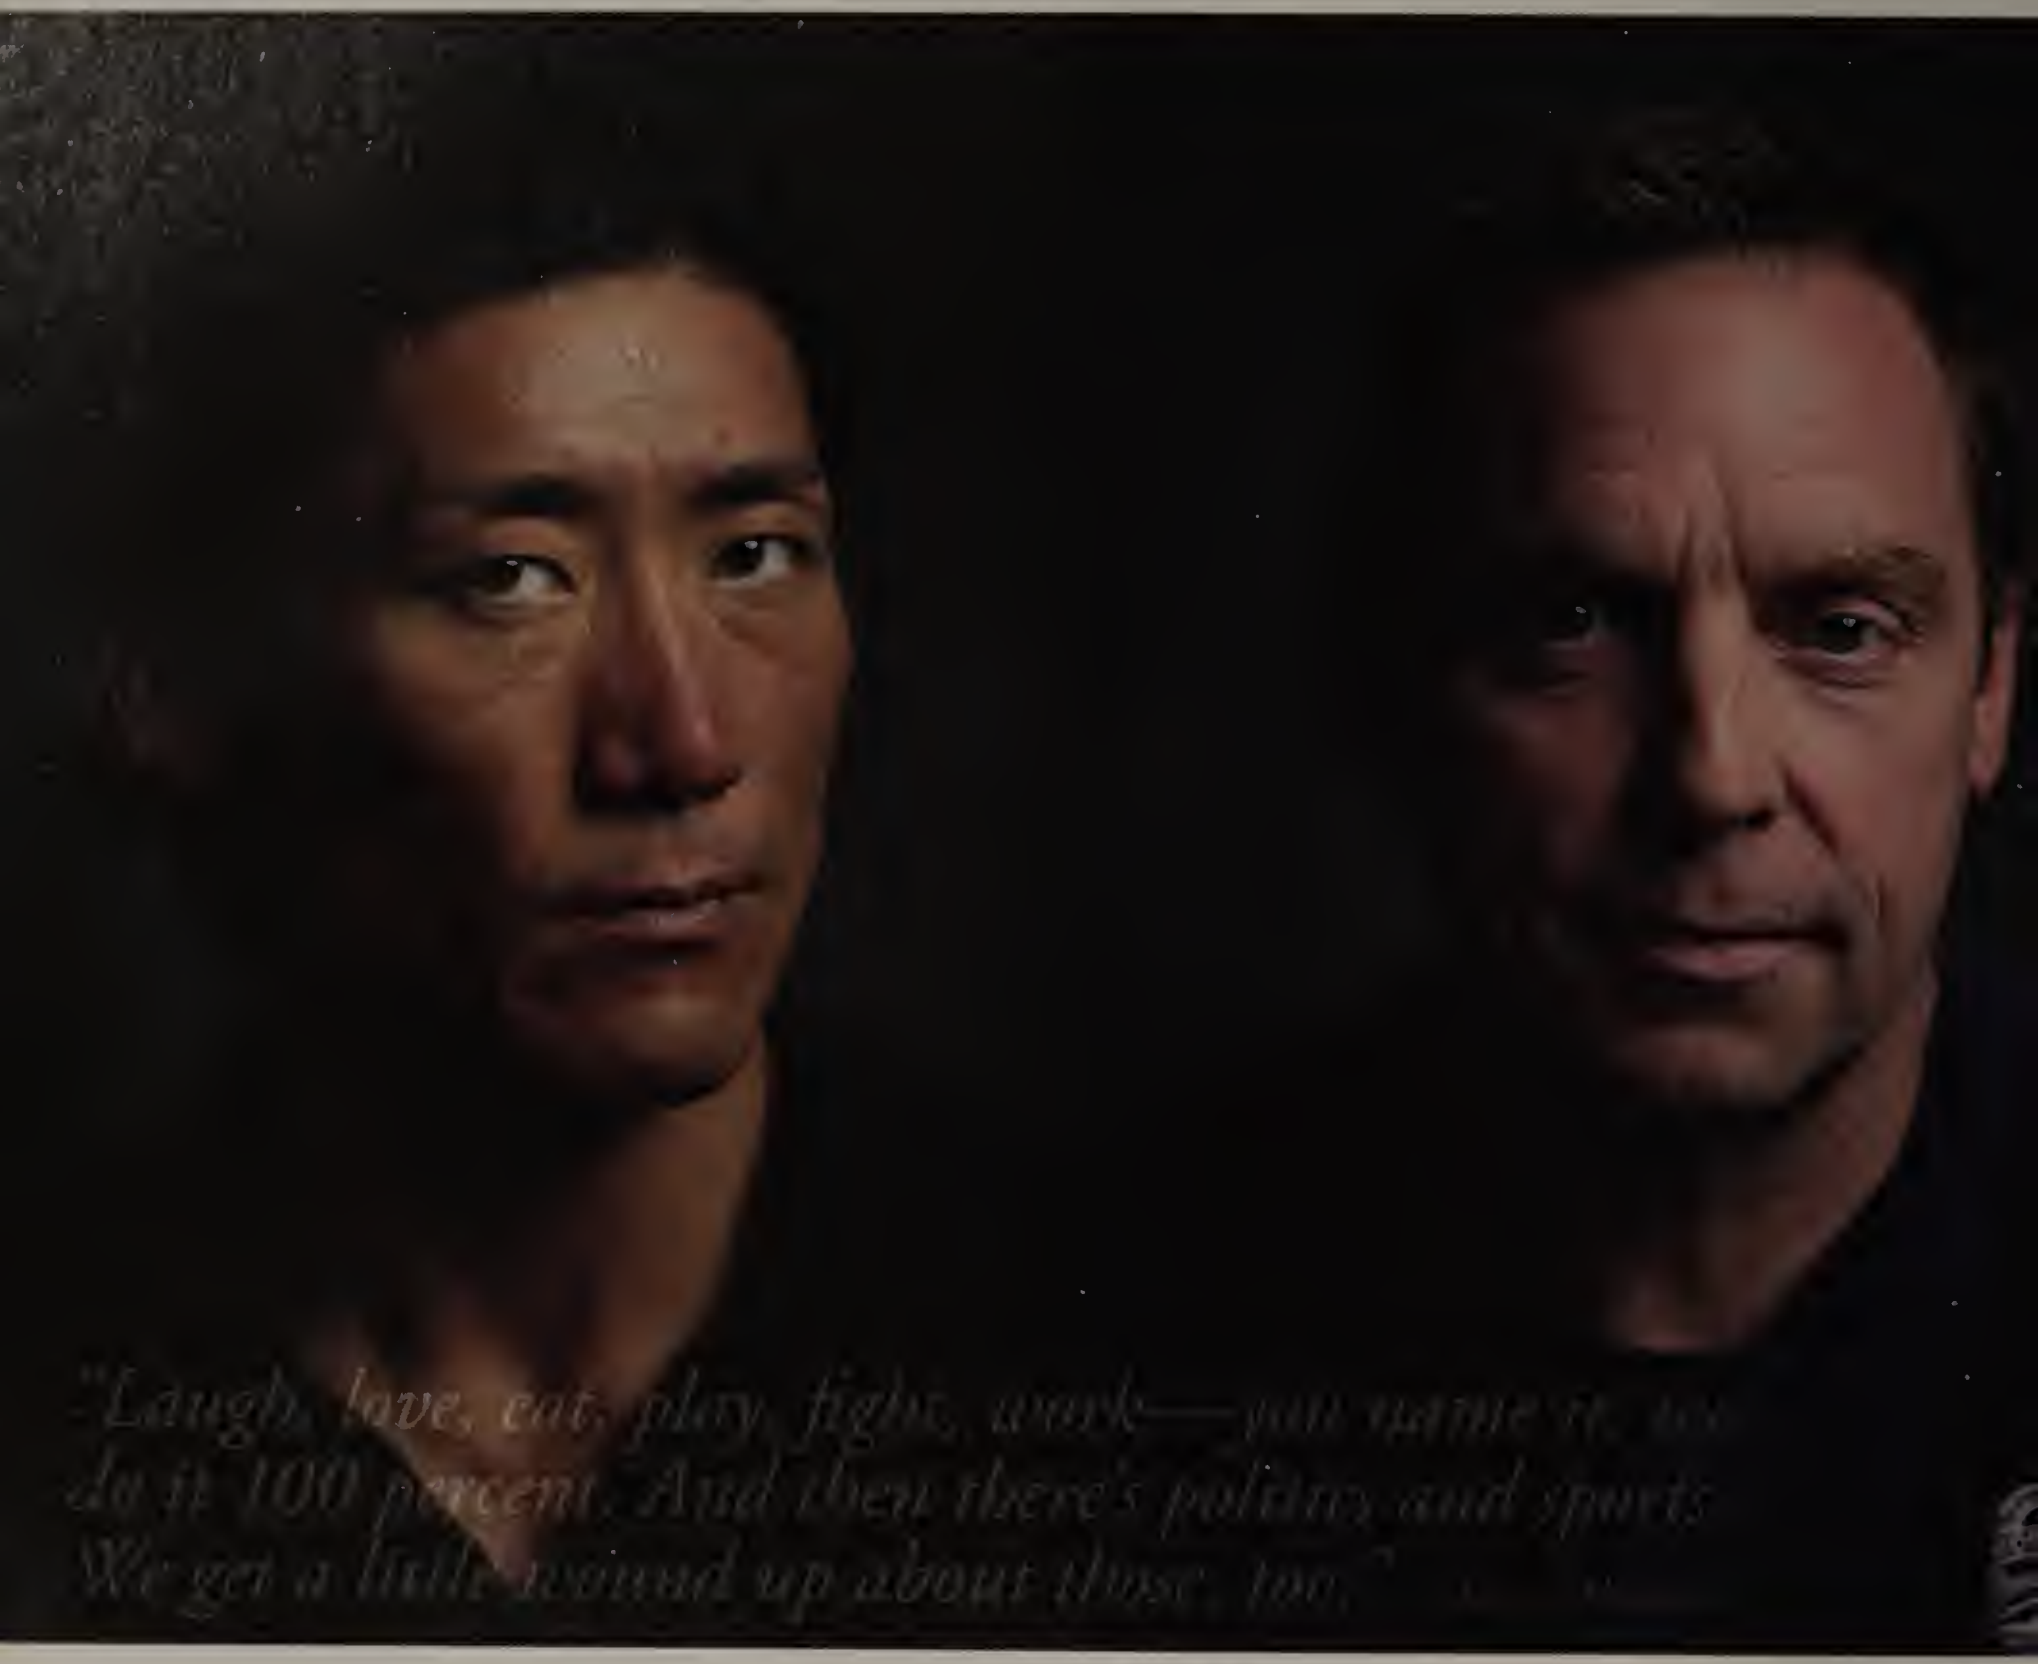
As the nurse in charge of BCH's medical response, Damian managed the hospital's actions and reunited families separated after the blasts.



Brian Gray, 24,
spectator; EMT-Intermediate at American Medical Response; Plympton firefighter

An off-duty EMT and firefighter spending the day with his girlfriend, Stefanie McLaughlin, Gray ran toward the bomb site and used his belt, shoelaces and zip ties to staunch the bleeding.

Stefanie McLaughlin, 21, spectator; EMT at American Medical Response; Plympton firefighter

Unbeknownst to her boyfriend, Brian Gray, McLaughlin followed him to the site, where she pulled people out of storefronts, assessed injuries and applied tourniquets.

Dan Soleau, 36, brand manager at Marathon Sports

Knocked unconscious by the bomb in front of Marathon Sports, Soleau came to, and then helped his coworkers move people inside the store, treating the injured and calming those who took shelter there.

Kevin Meehan, 47, Boston firefighter with Engine 7 and Tower Ladder 17

Among the first to reach the scene, Meehan and his fellow firefighters treated critically injured victims.

Dr. Natalie Stavas, 32, runner; pediatric resident at Boston Children's Hospital and Boston Medical Center

Blocks from finishing the Marathon, Stavas rushed to the site of the second explosion, where she performed CPR and treated three victims.

Peter Riddle, 44, board member at the Joe Andruzzi Foundation; vice president of talent management at Digitas

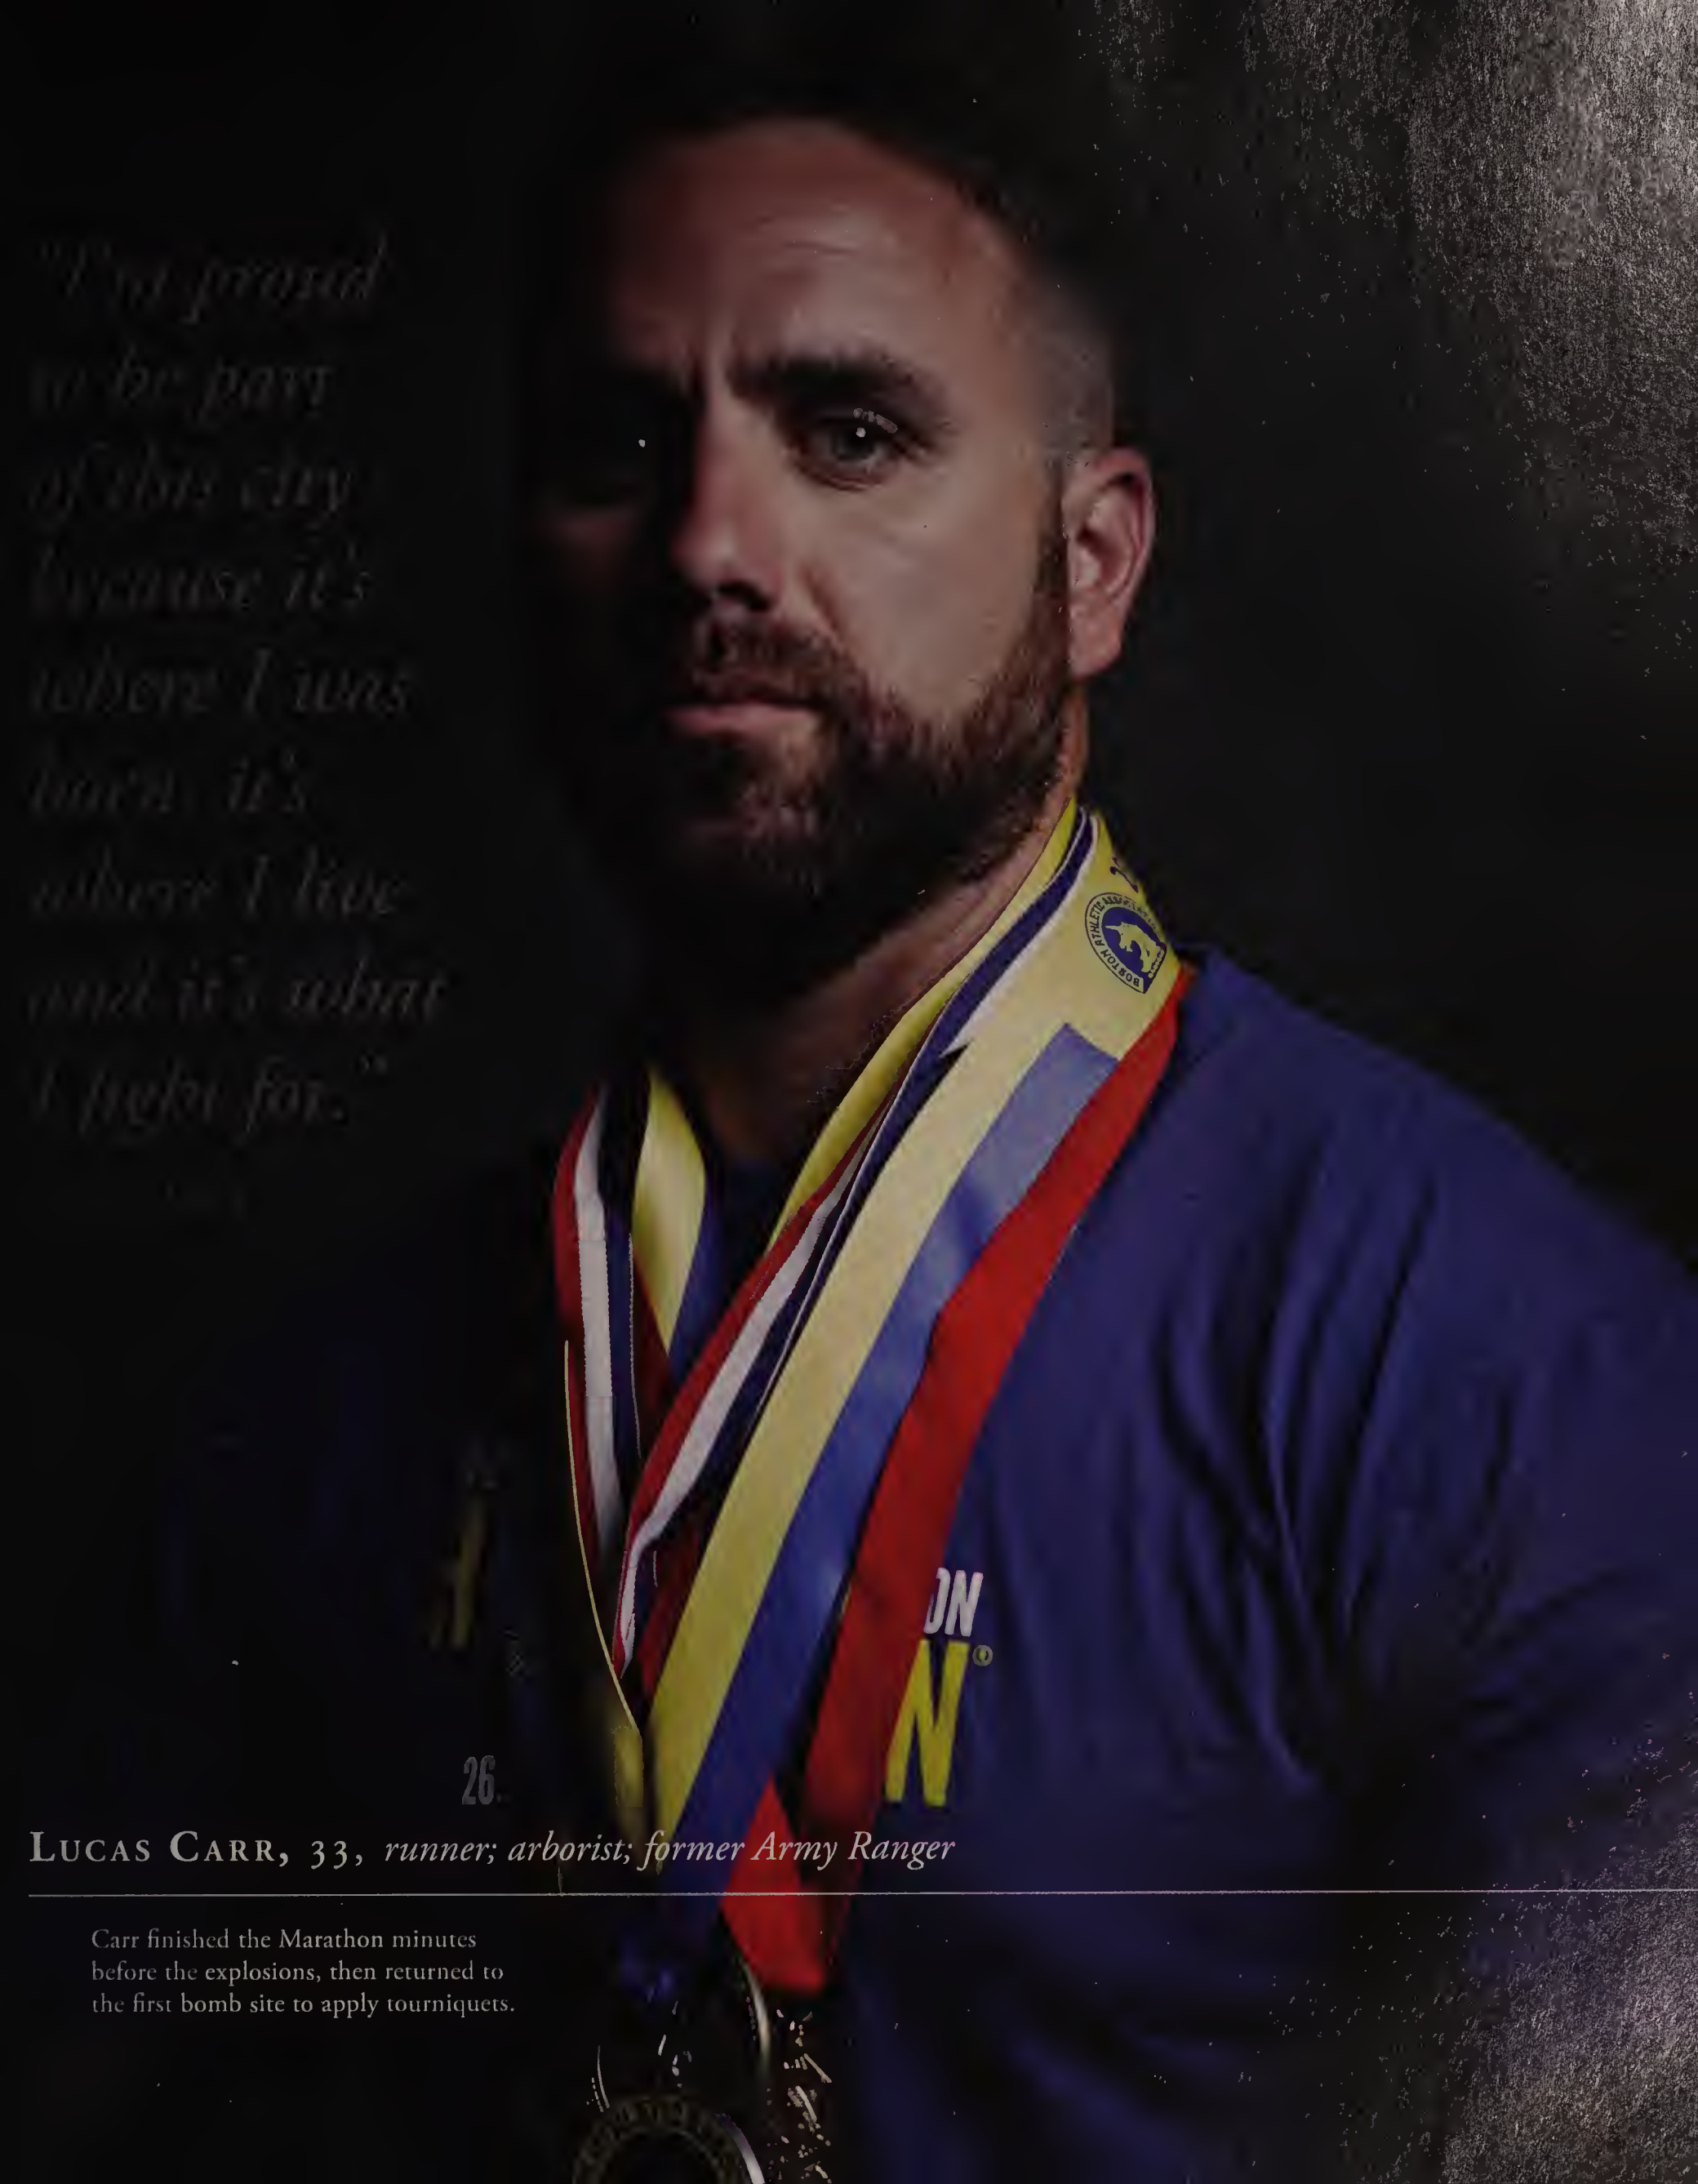
Riddle, who had been attending a Marathon party on the patio at Forum, carried injured patrons out of the restaurant for medical treatment.



"It didn't matter if you had years of medical training or none at all. The public were willing to take direction and assist in any way they could."

—Megan Tuthill

Megan Tuthill, 42, EMT at Boston Emergency Medical Services

Tuthill provided aid in the larger medical tent, treating one of the first victims brought in, and transported the wounded to the hospital, where she alerted staff to potential incoming injuries before returning to the emergency site with supplies.

LUCAS CARR, 33, runner; arborist; former Army Ranger

Carr finished the Marathon minutes before the explosions, then returned to the first bomb site to apply tourniquets.

VIDHYA NAGARAJAN

"EXCEPTIONAL" IS A FUNNY CONCEPT IN THESE FRACTURED TIMES.

Nowadays, anyone with an Internet connection is a dining critic, and anyone with a smartphone is an instant sports columnist. So for a magazine to pronounce the "Best" of everything smacks not only of presumption, but of anti-democratic leanings—or even rank oligarchism. Allow us to go on the record to explain our methodology. We gathered several dozen prominent Bostonians—business leaders, philanthropists, celebrity chefs—for dinner, then asked them to vote on the categories. Tallying the results, our editorial team set to work on vetting and research, producing this year's roster. You won't agree with all the results, but you're guaranteed that these winners deserve their accolades. So debate, argue, but most of all enjoy the 2013 Boston's Best Awards.

Burger

CRAIGIE ON MAIN

You've heard the legend: eight ounces of ground brisket, short rib and hanger steak. A soft-yet-structured homemade bun, studded with sesame seeds. Oozy Shelburne cheddar, a leaf of lettuce, a dab of mace ketchup. But you won't find it on the menu—and only a limited number are hand-packed, slow cooked and seared each night. Like all the best stories, this burger is only available in the bar, so get there early to score a seat.

Bagels

Bagel Rising

There are two types of people in this world: people who love bagels, and liars. This cozy Allston outpost delights lovers (and liars) with 16 varieties of rolls-with-a-hole cooked Old World style—kettle boiled, then hearth-oven baked. We're talking chewy, soft rings with crispy shells. Cream cheeses from plain to jalapeño are also made from scratch, and vegans will applaud the homemade tofu spreads that taste like anything but afterthoughts.

Bakery

Flour Bakery + Cafe

It's the least gym-friendly of mottos: "Make life sweeter.... Eat dessert first!" But once you peer into Flour's pastry case, how can you resist? Sticky buns are varnished with caramel-honey-sugar "goo." Flaky, glazed pop-tarts erupt with raspberry jam. And our favorite cookie, the Chunky Lola, bursts with bittersweet chocolate, coconut and pecans. One whiff, and your willpower will dissolve into meringue clouds bigger than you've ever seen.

Bar Food

Abe & Louie's

Enough with the nachos—old reliable Abe & Louie's takes bar bites to the next level with their jumbo lump-crabmeat cocktail. Enjoy meaty morsels of Chesapeake Bay's finest with cocktail sauce, remoulade or a simple spritz of lemon. The classic steak-house interior, with its rich mahogany, chandeliers and oversized leather chairs, is the perfect place to call it a day with some of Boston's saltiest bartenders.

Barbecue

Sweet Cheeks

Start with the warm Bucket o' Biscuits with honey butter, toss in some fried green tomatoes and then turn your attention to the main event: wood-smoked, Texas-style BBQ. You can freight your Big Cheeks (two meats) or Fat Cheeks (three meats) tray with finger-licking Berkshire pork, Great Northern brisket, half a slab of pork ribs, or buttermilk fried chicken. For sides you've got Hot and Cold Scoops, like broccoli casserole and slaw. To wash it down, reach for a House Bill 819—a palate-cleansing blend of lemon, mint and tea-infused corn whiskey.

Brasserie

Gaslight

As the French iteration of the tavern, brasseries are designed to be inviting and social. Gaslight in the South End's SoWa district upholds this tradition, flaunting a Parisian sophistication that's never fussy. The glow of gas lamps reflected in vintage mirrors illuminates elegant steak tartare and ornate niçoise salads. Be sure to order the moules frites, embellished with a kick of Pernod.

Bread
Clear Flour

We first came to sample the much-ballyhooed challah turtles, their eyes fashioned from chocolate bits and dried cranberries, only available on Friday mornings. Then we returned for the puffy, salt-studded German pretzels sold on Saturdays and Sundays. When we finally tried the petite baguettes known as batards, it became clear that this is a gourmand's favorite source for daily bread.

Breakfast
Uncommon Grounds

If breakfast is the most important meal of the day, do it right. That means a seat at this Watertown eatery and a plate heaped with crispy red-bliss home fries, buttered toast and the Uncommonly Special scrambled eggs. Variations include a wholesome veggie option, the sweet-spicy Chorizo & Cheese and, for lumberjacks and indecisive carnivores, the Meat Lover's Scramble, overflowing with sausage, ham and bacon.

Brunch
Mistral

Brunch can be an all-day affair. You'll certainly want it to be at Mistral—one of the city's most beautiful dining rooms, named for the cloud-clearing winds of Provence. Frittata is baked with foraged mushrooms right from single-serving cast-iron pans, while impossibly dainty stacks of lemon-poppy seed pancakes burst with bushels of blueberries. And mimosas are elevated with hand-squeezed OJ and Veuve.

Burrito
Anna's Taqueria

Any burrito worth the name follows a formula: flavorful meats, a fresh tortilla and enough ambient warmth to melt the ingredients into a delicious jumble. Anna's gets it right with a savory breakfast version as well as choose-your-own-adventure options in which you mix-and-match rice and beans with fillings like slow-cooked chicken ranchero, carnitas or (delicious) beef tongue. Don't blink: Anna's crew can build and hand off your wrap in less than 20 seconds.

Atlantic Fish

Nothing disgraces the New England name like milky, insipid chowdah. You can trust Atlantic Fish for an honorable iteration of our quintessential dish. A shrimp-and-quahog stock gives depth to the velvety base, which is a conduit for tender clams and soft chunks of potato. Celery and herbs subtly enrich texture and flavor. And you can swap your conventional cup for a perfectly crusty bread bowl.

Clio

Four years into his tenure at Clio, bar manager/lead alchemist Todd Maul still looks every bit the mad cocktail inventor as he prepares a reverse-engineered gin and tonic, the ice cubes grafted with Persian lime extract to gradually infuse flavor. He's the brains behind the bar's rotovap (a rotary evaporator used to distill spirits) and centrifuge (for the heatless extraction of liquids from solids). If this sounds painfully scientific, wait until you taste the rotovapped Mary's Liquor Cabinet—a smooth, potent elixir, finished with a blot of Maul's trademark Lillet Paint.

Dessert

Harvest

It's no wonder Food & Wine recently crowned Brian Mercury the People's Best New Pastry Chef—East Region. The desserts he's crafting at Harvest look as exquisite as they taste. Fennel custard is plated with giant crumbs of olive-oil cake, daubs of blood-orange marmalade and sprigs of candied fennel. Or there's the irresistible chocolate crèmeux, which casts stone-ground Taza cacao in high relief. You'd be wise to save room for these accomplished sweets.

Dinner With Live Music

The Beehive

What's special about the Beehive is its levels of immersion. Claim a cafe table at the edge of the stage if you want to feel the music quiver through your hair. Or give yourself more room to breathe in the adjoining bar if you'd rather focus on dinner and conversation. You can also migrate to the upstairs bar, acoustics rising with you, if you're aiming to intercept a Daisy Buchanan as she walks through the door. The setting is so bohemian and 1920s-inspired, you just might find her there.

Blue Nile

A meal at Blue Nile is always intimate. Jade walls snugly enclose 10 tables, and pendant lamps blaze like low-hanging stars. After supple whole-wheat flatbreads have been dappled with a thick meat or vegetable stew, guests are encouraged to eat with their hands or feed each other in a loving Ethiopian act of gursha. For a diverse sampling, order the Nile Combination so you can relish one order of meat and three vegetables, such as lentils in a spicy berbere sauce, or yellow peas seasoned with tumeric.

Dim Sum

DUMPLING CAFÉ

Two words: soup dumplings. The uninitiated should direct their immediate attention to the miniature buns, otherwise known as xiao long bao. Filled with broth and either pork or a pork–crabmeat mixture, these Shanghai-style dumplings are sturdier that their thin skins suggest, and bear the weight of their contents without splitting. The trick is eating them mindfully, lest you burn the roof of your mouth. You'll want to quickly rip a corner of the dumpling with your teeth, count to five as heat escapes, and then gulp it down.

French

Bistro du Midi

No one ever refers to soufflé as "game-changing," but after tasting Bistro du Midi's, you might. Ballooning from its ramekin of blissfully light custard, this airy wonder is worth the 25 minutes it takes to bake. Chef Robert Sisca's inspired hand with Provençal flavors and fresh ingredients conjures dishes like lamb tartare, served with a smear of spicy mustard and a perfectly cooked quail egg. The conclusive proof that this is French dining at its best: beverage director Todd Lipman's exquisite wine list and cocktail artistry. Unsurpassed.

Donut

UNION SQUARE DONUTS

It's fitting that Union Square Donuts opened its doors this past Valentine's Day: It's been seducing local sweet-tooths (and breaking hearts when the goods sell out) ever since. Plump and fluffy, these donuts tantalize from the inside out, reaching an apogee whether glazed with a tangy berry burst of cherry hibiscus or lightly robed in sea-salted bourbon caramel. BATCH

South End locals Susie Parish and Veronica Janssens make their seven deceptively simple batches from scratch. We say deceptively, because it takes real artistry to finesse something this good from so few ingredients. Beyond milk, cream and egg yolks, you'll taste locally sourced sea salt in the salted caramel. In the vanilla bean, each organic bean is split by hand. With nary an additive or artificial flavor, this is the purest carton of cream you can find.

colades, but connoisseurs know that her most brilliant culinary flights are found upstairs at the Charles Hotel. Beneath garlands of twinkling white lights on the terrace, enjoy a chilled aperitif, beautifully composed by beverage director Young Won. Grilled Woodbury littlenecks, served on an iron grill with garlic bread and thick slices of andouille, are an exemplary starter. Never overwrought, Rialto evokes the beauty of northern Italy in its harmonies of Taggia olives and artichokes, mint and pine nuts.

A newly expanded bar stocked with more than 100 bottles of craft tequilas make this the city's ground zero for fierce margaritas—but that's only the beginning. BonChon

Why fry chicken once when you can fry it twice? So goes the wisdom at BonChon, with obsession-inducing results: juicy meat that's piping hot, crunchy (not greasy) coating and no nebulous strip of fat between the two. Each piece is hand-brushed with a secret sauce and cooked to order. Fried chicken platters are a staple in South Korea, and with locations in both Allston and Cambridge, you now have two places to try it.

Lobster Roll

James Hook & Co.

Here's the deal with lobster rolls: The whole point is to showcase the lobster. If you start getting too fancy, you'll end up masking its flavor. At James Hook & Co., the crustacean speaks for itself, sharing the podium only with chopped celery and a camera-shy hint of mayo. Available in two sizes—regular and large—your roll can be toasted upon request. And the best place to consume it is right outside at a picnic table overlooking the waterfront.

Oleana

It's occasionally forgotten that Ana Sortun's Inman Square flagship, long adored as a romantic dining spot, serves some of the most nuanced cuisine in town. There is a complexity to each of her mezes, like the quail kebobs with a peppery Turkish baharat rub, and the creamy carrot puree made with dukkah, an Egyptian spice mix ground with nuts. Her seasonings add vigor without overpowering the plate. And extra-virgin olive oil, used in place of richer agents like butter or cream, will keep you light on your feet.

Regina Pizzeria

Sure, Regina has the unfair advantage of an 87-year head start (it opened in 1926). But its tried-and-true recipe continues to outdo rival pizzerias, thanks to three key components: a sauce that's piquant and peppery with a trace of aged Romano; aged whole-milk mozzarella; and a legendary crust that's delighted diners for decades. To cap it off, gourmet pizzas are finished with a judicious sprinkle of basil.

Sandwich

THE SALTY PIG

Chef Kevin O'Donnell may have some of the best charcuterie in town, but our favorite part of his lunch menu is the innocent-looking list of sandwiches. When you chow down on the explosively flavorful crispy pork-head terrine with pickled veggies, fine herbs and house mayo, you realize you're a humble novice in this chef's lunchtime court. Skip the side salad and go with the chips—it's better for you.

Sommelier

Nicholas Daddona at Meritage

A great sommelier possesses assured and encyclopedic knowledge. But he also has the ability to psychically project his palate into random situations. A touch of daikon in your oyster dish? The acidity in a sparkling Vouvray would play well on that. Meritage, long a bastion of oenophilia (oenocentricism?), has a fitting champion in Daddona, whose expertise is as developed as his talent for boosting a superb meal to the sublime. And the impressive wine list at his disposal gives him a potent roster of flavors to showcase his art.

Southern

Estelle's

Much of Boston's Southern cuisine is an approximate mix of stereotype and hazy nostalgia, usually undermined by short cuts or plain ignorance. Chef/owner Brian Poe and chef Eric Gbur̆ski are traditionalists where it matters, and know their way around a po' boy or catfish burger or buttermilk fried pickle. But they're not afraid of small refinements, like putting tasso ham in the hush puppies, or enhancing deviled eggs by means of smoked chicken livers.

Spanish

Toro

Even as its New York iteration prepares to open, this South End mainstay remains furiously popular (good luck scoring a table during peak hours, sigh)—and with reason. Ken Oringer and Jamie Bissonnette continue, despite years of accolades, to create Boston's most exquisite interpretations of Barcelona-style tapas. Roasted bone marrow with oxtail marmalade, smoked duck drumettes, seared razor clams with garlic... even the patatas bravas are memorable. And the drink list covers all grounds, including hard-to-find sherries and authentically down-market calimocho.

Steak House

Grill 23

The grande dame of steak houses turns 30 this year, but she hardly feels over-the-hill. Classic service and chef Jay Murray's unsurpassed standards for a filet have kept this jewel from losing its luster, while the wine program and top-notch seafood add to the sparkle. Sourced exclusively from California's Brandt Beef (natural, sustainable bovines with impeccable genealogies), your steak is always a cut above, while à la carte delicacies such as the 100-day-aged rib eye are the measure of carnivorous desire.

Take-out Lunch

LAFFA

Despite an expansion into shawarma sandwiches in recent months, the mainstay of this workday favorite has always been the vegetarian salad bar. Order up a box of falafel and pile it with mounds of fresh Mediterranean flavors such as shirazi, eggplant ragout and marinated cabbage, and don't forget the killer baba ganoush. If you've got room afterward (unlikely), stop back for frozen yogurt dispensed from the bank of machines on the side wall.

Sushi

Uni

Not your average sushi joint, unless average means sashimi so bejeweled and breathtaking that you'd never dream of soiling it with Kikkoman. In true Ken Oringer style, each dish is authentic at its core, often sourced straight from Tokyo's Tskuji market, then enlivened with a gutsy tweak. Dive into the deep end with the incomparable omakase, or choose from symphonic bites including hamachi toro with black-truffle vinaigrette and pork belly croutons. In recent months, the weekend late-night ramen menu has been making waves (try the vegetable version).

Wine Bar
Les Zygomates

While the focus is on classic French, the lengthy by-the-glass list at this Leather District standby doesn't flinch from Italy and California, while the option for three-ounce pours gives you room to sample. The bistro fare—frisée with pig's ear and soft egg or the duck confit crêpe—is beautifully executed (and Gallic), while the oyster specials are not to be missed. Almost as good: Some of the city's hottest jazz acts burn up the stage while you sip.

Wings
Clerys

There's nothing immediately fancy about these barroom standards. They come in buffalo, BBQ or Wing of the Day, with blue-cheese dressing and celery sticks—but executive chef Kelly Snogles' process makes all the difference. Never frozen, these wings are air-dried before baking, turning them extra crispy when they finally come out of the fryer. They're tender enough to fall off the bone, with the perfect pitch of heat, thanks to judicious use of Frank's RedHot sauce. With an ice-cold beer, they're ambrosia.

The Greatest Bar

First things first: The scene begins with live music on the ground floor and a massive screen beaming the moment's must-see sporting event. The second-floor balcony offers a great view for spying on the off-rhythm shenanigans below. The third-floor bar's skeeball machines provide a home base for the skeeBoston league. And if you're looking for a quiet spot to mull over the breaks of the game, then escape upstairs to the top floor, where you'll find a more upscale saloon vibe.

Strega Waterfront

It may be years before you see your favorite sports stars in bronze at Boston's long-rumored Plaza of Champions, but you can catch them in the flesh now at Strega Waterfront. Nick Varano's glitzy Seaport spot draws enough athletes—from home teams and visiting squads—to fill the rosters of an all-star game. It's no wonder that former Sox star Jason Varitek picked Strega when proposing to his wife.

AVERY BAR

Hotel bars are often oases for solitary souls—but the Ritz-Carlton's Avery Bar offers comforts to attract locals as well as out-of-towners. A relatively calm retreat amid the downtown tumult, the bar boasts a midcentury modern vibe with buttery leather seats tucked around corners. The menus, which feature 10 martini variations among other choice sips, are inconspicuously placed on tables, adding to a feel that's more plush den than high-turnover bar. You may even luck out and score a big spot by the fireplace all for yourself.

The returns on your investment are high at the Bristol Lounge. Welcome Trend

AMARI IN COCKTAILS

Long served after meals, amari have now taken a starring role in aperitifs. Fernet opened the floodgates, and we're happy to see a full arsenal of the herbal liqueurs behind the bar—artichoke-heavy Cynar, Sicily's viscous Averna, the floral Meletti, the cola-like Ramazzotti and more, not to mention cousins from beyond Italian borders, like the Czech Becherovka. Often steeped with dozens of botanicals, they add depth and nuance to drinks, proving useful for more than just a bitter end.

Worst Trend

Price Creep in Cocktails

Craft booze and first-rate bartenders were sure to be an expensive mix, but the resulting price escalation is getting out of hand. The days of single-digit prices for cocktails at marquee bars are long gone, but the tabs seem to have skipped puberty and gone straight to the mid-teens. An open plea with our wallets in mind: some balance to the checks, please.

THANK YOU BOSTON

April 15th, 2013 is a date we will never forget.
A day that started early with the excitement of celebrating one of Boston's longstanding traditions.
A day that started with cheers, but ended in tears.
Boston learned something that day. We learned we are strong.
A community that helps itself, supports and heals itself.
A community of perseverance and strength. A community that fights and defeats evil.

We'd like to thank BOSTON'S BEST:
The firefighters, policemen, first responders and more importantly, the people of Boston.

Although FORUM was ground zero and sustained heavy damages, your overwhelming support kept our spirits high and our focus clear.

In August 2013, we will open better and stronger.

It's named after one of the hard-drinking literary giants of the 20th century, but before the conversation turns existential, we'll prose the pros: 21 beers on tap from 21 different brewers, a voluminous selection of bottled and canned beer, off-menu food deals and a mug club for regulars.

The barely year-old brainchild from chef Brian Poe (Poe's Kitchen at the Rattlesnake, Estelle's) focuses on the eponymous tips (as in steak, swordfish and lamb) and taps (about 61 bottles and 36 drafts), plus cocktails such as the lethal Redrum made with house-made red-pepper-infused rum, cabernet, ginger, lime and mint. Add Poe's stock-in-trade—exotic specials such as kangaroo and yak—and a wise and friendly staff, and it's no wonder Tip Tap's quickly climbed to the top of the hill.

Pega Seeking Technology Architects

Time was when "Big Business" had a lock on the best technology because they were the only ones who could afford it. Now, most businesses are running on clunky systems that are ugly, slow, difficult to use, and quickly fall behind the real needs of the business people.

Bright, new graduates who enter the business world are shocked to discover that they are expected to work with systems and applications that are inferior to those that they use every day on their personal computers, tablets, and Smartphones.

How could it have come to this? Solving this problem represents a massive technology opportunity.

A Compelling Opportunity

We need the best and brightest technologists to work on solving this problem.

We are Leading that Race

Pegasystems has the technology to change business in a dramatic way and shatter IT tradition. We are embarked on the journey and recognized as The Leader. The technology challenges are immense – combining safety and usability for the business person with power and scale to meet the real-world needs of mega-corporations.

Conditions are Right

Today's tech-savvy business leaders want a technology that can scale to support a significant enterprise and offer resilience and safety to sustain a critical business operation – while letting them drive their own success and providing a user experience that matches the best personal technology.

Creative Engineers and Designers Thrive in Our Community

Thought Leadership is the persuasive presentation of a well-informed opinion for the purpose of positive change.

Pegasystems is a 30-year-old start-up. Two of our founders are still actively engaged with the company – yet more than 50% of our staff have joined us within the last two years. The feel is energetic, fast-paced, creative, casual, yet focused, aggressive, and in it to win.

We are a meritocracy where your opinion is valued based on what you contribute to the debate. You will interact at all levels. The best ideas win. You will be challenged by the smartest people you have ever met. You will learn a lot. You will never be lost in the machinery. You will be surprised at how much autonomy you are given – and chastened by the responsibility to deliver that comes along with it. Your work will very quickly change the products that we build and change the lives of the people whom our products touch.

You will want to come to work because the challenge is unique and daunting, the technology keeps moving so there is always more to learn, and because being part of something radically game-changing is an opportunity that doesn't happen to many people – only the special ones.

To view the job specification and apply for a Technology Architect position, contact:

THE BOOK OF MORMON, BROADWAY IN BOSTON

Counting this show's accolades would take longer than the two-and-a-half hours of hilarity and profanity that audiences enjoyed when it came to town in April. "God's favorite musical" follows the travails of two Mormon missionaries bound for Uganda, including their residency in a village of blasphemers and encounter with a local warlord. The show proved equally popular with Bostonians, selling out its four-week run and prompting a 2014 return engagement.

OS GÊMEOS, INSTITUTE OF CONTEMPORARY ART/BOSTON

In August 2012, the Institute of Contemporary Art/Boston opened its home to Brazilian brothers Otavio and Gustavo Pandolfo, otherwise known as Os Gêmeos—"The Twins" (they're identical). These A-listers in the graffiti and urban-art world displayed dream-state depictions in paintings, sculptures and installations, reiterating the Institute's mission to bring the world's best living artists to the attention of local audiences. It's something we appreciate every time we see their 70-by-70-foot mural on the side of a ventilation building in Dewey Square.

Local Actor

Tom Derrah

Acting is all about range, and for Tom Derrah, that means charming the snake within. No, not as in Shakespeare's Iago. We're talking about an actual snake: Come September, Derrah will slither as Kaa in Mary Zimmerman's adaptation of The Jungle Book with the Huntington Theatre Company. "It's not like being a movie star," says Derrah, a founding member of the American Repertory Theater. "Their idea of transforming is dying their hair. I'm stuck figuring out how to play a snake with two arms and two legs."

Local Actress

Paula Plum

The Ironwoman of acting, Paula Plum won the Elliot Norton Award for Sustained Excellence in 2004 for what is now a more than 35-year career. Touted for her range, she received acclaim this winter for her lead role as Dr. Katherine Brandt in the Lyric Stage Company's 33 Variations. Plum has made appearances with companies throughout Boston, starting when she was just 3 years old, and is a founding member of the Actors' Shakespeare Project. For Plum, it's all's well that ends well.

Music Lineup

House of Blues

Sure, you can see Aerosmith or Mumford & Sons play at other amphitheaters in town, but such spaces are more likely to leave you drowning in the sea of show-goers, not lost in the music from the stage. Ample accommodation and a roster of can't-miss headliners converge at the House of Blues, a venue large enough to attract big-name bands but with a capacity that ensures you'll still catch some sweat flying from the guitarist's arm. And you won't have to sell your firstborn for a ticket.

Live by Night by Dennis Lehane

The latest novel by Dorchester native and crime fiction czar Dennis Lehane begins in Boston: It's the Prohibition era, and rum is pouring into New England from Florida as though its coastline were a colander. Released in October, Lehane's 10th work of fiction already has Hollywood executives all but offering lap dances for the exclusive movie rights. And who said crime doesn't pay?

Marmee & Louisa by Eve LaPlante

Behind every great woman is her mother, or so argues Eve LaPlante's 2012 dual-subject biography of Little Women author Louisa May Alcott and her mother, Abigail May Alcott. LaPlante, a Brookline native and Alcott descendant, draws on new documents that contradict the popular assumption that the 19th-century writer owed her then-uncommon literary success to her father. Instead, this scrupulous ancestral study reveals that it was Abigail's progressive thinking that influenced her daughter's writing. Skeptical? Read the book yourself.

THE SINCLAIR

A gift from the music gods, Harvard Square's newest rock club supplies a dependable string of primarily indie bands that you can actually see—the sight lines at the Sinclair's subway-style space are killer. With a standing-room mezzanine, a seating area that drops over the crowd below and a stage that's just four feet high, you can make goo-goo eyes at the musicians who make you quiver all night long. And it's just a door away from the attached restaurant and patio, where you can carbo-load and sober up—or continue to enjoy the post-show euphoria.

The story of a young prince with a curious disposition, Pippin sat largely untouched in the 40 years since its Broadway debut, until the American Repertory Theater dusted it off—and how. Director Diane Paulus had acrobats singing and actors flying through the air. Broadway vet Andrea Martin, playing Berthe, even performed a number while suspended upside-down from a trapeze. This spring, Pippin returned to Broadway via the A.R.T., resulting in four Tony Awards, including Best Revival of a Musical.

Clutch Performance

BRUINS VS. MAPLE LEAFS, GAME 7, THIRD PERIOD

Trailing by three goals in the third period of Game 7, the Bruins looked like they were about to officially cough up their 3-1 series lead and exit the postseason in the first round. Fact: No team in NHL history ever came back from a three-goal deficit in the third period of a Game 7. New fact: One team did. After scoring two goals with less than two minutes remaining, the Bruins took the game to overtime, when Patrice Bergeron sealed the historic comeback while fans in the parking lot rushed back toward TD Garden. If the 2004 Red Sox taught us anything, it's that you might not want to leave early when a Boston team is involved.

Example of Celtic Pride

Jason Collins

In April, the center who started seven games for the 2012-13 Celtics became the first pro athlete active in a Big Four sport to come out of the closet. When Collins informed Doc Rivers of the story that he was about to write in Sports Illustrated, Rivers nonchalantly replied: "I wish you could've gotten me more rebounds."

Experiment, Failed

Gronk Playing Through Injuries

Two touchdowns, 137 yards and an ominous departure in the fourth quarter with an arm injury: That was Rob Gronkowski's stat line for the Nov. 18 game against the Indianapolis Colts. Gronk missed the next five games before gutting it out to play in the regular-season finale, which in retrospect might've been a bad idea, given that the injury sportscasters would refer to as "an arm" was more accurately described as "a fractured arm." Which he then fell on, hard, early in the team's first playoff game. Now, after a total of four operations on the arm, the big lug's also dealing with back surgery. We'd suggest that coach Bill Belichick mothball Gronk until about Week 15 of next season, but Gronk seems like the kind of guy who might fare even worse with free time on his hands. Better an injury happen on the field than in a high-stakes game of thumb wrestling at a porn-star convention in Mexico. Which, to be clear, hasn't happened to Gronk. Yet.

Experiment, Successful So Far

John Lackey

Pitchers who undergo Tommy John surgery typically fall into two camps: the guys who make a strong comeback, and those who are never the same. While Lackey hasn't gotten great run support, his ERA and high strikeout rate suggest that the once-fearsome starting pitcher could be one of the Tommy John success stories. The Red Sox rolled the dice on Lackey, and so far, the gamble is paying off.

WES WELKER

We suppose time will tell whether Danny Amendola helps us forget Welker, but we already suspect that this is one case where the cogs in the mighty Patriots machine may not prove to be so interchangeable. Receivers aren't exactly high priorities under the Belichick regime (remember the Reche Caldwell era?), but 1,300-yard receivers are hardly thick on the ground. We'll find out this fall, and in the meantime comfort ourselves by thinking that Welker is really a double agent sent by Belichick to sabotage Peyton Manning. Whoops, another Welker dropped pass on a crucial Broncos drive! Mwwwaaa-ha-ha-ha-ha! Yes, let's hope.

Crafty Veteran

JAROMIR JAGR

Fans of a certain age will remember seeing Jagr playing against the Bruins back at the old Boston Garden—which was demolished in 1997. Traded to the Bruins from the Dallas Stars on April 2, Jagr notched two goals and seven assists in his first 10 games in a Bruins jersey. Not bad for a guy who began his career playing for the 1990-91 Penguins. Now if we could just get him to grow back his famously luxuriant mullet.

Implosion

2012 Red Sox

Just when you thought the 2011 Red Sox were as bad as it got, the 2012 Red Sox came along to remind us that a big payroll does not guarantee a ticket to the postseason. Or a modicum of competitive spirit, for that matter. The 2012 team racked up the most losses since 1965, a debacle that dismantled the roster, ended the Fenway sellout streak and basically forced Bobby Valentine into hiding. Amazingly, they still had a winning record at the end of July, but a 9-20 August took care of that. And somehow, things went downhill from there: The Sox won just seven more games in the rest of the season. But hey, you can't finish worse than that, right? Please say we're right.

Pleasant Surprise

THE RED SOX APRIL START

Typically, Red Sox spring training is a slowly inflating balloon of hype that's destined to burst—perhaps even on Opening Day. And there's normally a red-hot rookie, high-priced free agent or combination thereof who is supposed to right the good ship Fenway and send it sailing to World Series glory. This year, the Red Sox provided no such archetypes. There were surely many furrowed brows in those less-than-full stands, as fans scrutinized their programs to find out who, exactly, these new guys were. Well, it turns out that the new guys are all right, to the tune of the best record in baseball through the end of April. And we even have the obligatory crazy pitcher, Koji Uehara, who loves high-fives almost as much as he loves tweeting photos of Bud Light. In other words, it looks like we're in for a better year than anyone expected.

MVP

Tom Brady

Brady's 2012 season stats were typically ridiculous, with the Gisele-wedder and part-time Uggs model throwing for 4,827 yards and 34 touchdowns, and continuing his march into the NFL's history books (freshest superlative: most playoff passing yards, ever). But it's Brady's off-field demeanor that cements his position as the most important player in the New England sports universe. In the chaotic world of 22-year-old multimillionaires and raging egomaniacs, Brady is a cool head who works to suppress the caustic griping that tears apart so many teams. While legions of fans were complaining that the Patriots let Brady's top target, Wes Welker, slip away to Denver, Brady was sanguine during a WEEI interview. "My job for my team is to be the best quarterback and not the general manager, not the coach and not the owner," Brady said. Spoken like a true MVP.

Recurring Nightmare

Pats Losing in the Postseason

The final score was Ravens 28, Patriots 13 in the AFC Championship Game. To make matters worse, New England had been ahead 13-7 at halftime. Worse than that, Tom Brady had a record of 67-0 when leading at home at halftime (now, of course, 67-1). Worse than that, the Ravens were only there because they had squeaked out the unlikeliest of double-overtime wins in Denver. For the Pats, it was another frustrating end to a promising season, another denial of that elusive fourth ring. At least this time the Giants weren't involved.

Rookie

Torey Krug

Boston has a soft spot for overachieving little guys (see: Woodhead, Danny), and it looks like 5-foot-9-inch Bruins rookie Torey Krug is already well on his way to earning a major role with the team. After playing for Providence for most of the season, Krug joined the Bruins roster in the playoff series against the Rangers and promptly scored four goals in five games. If a rookie can join a team under postseason stress and immediately fire a laser past Henrik Lundqvist, we have a feeling that we'll be seeing much more of Torey Krug.

Trade

The Nick Punto Deal

It almost seemed an admission of defeat, but jettisoning $250 million in future payroll obligations and some unhappy clubhouse campers proved cathartic for the Sox. Last August, Boston sent Josh Beckett, Carl Crawford, Adrian Gonzalez and Nick Punto to the Dodgers in exchange for James Loney and four minor-leaguers. Really, the trade was all about the money and the Dodgers' engagement in the sort of short-term thinking that historically bedeviled the Red Sox (the words "Jeff Bagwell for Larry Andersen!" still set teeth on edge in Massachusetts). Through the first half of this season, the Sox were in first place, the Dodgers in last and Josh Beckett was 0-5 and on the disabled list with a nerve irritation. Thanks, L.A.—we might say you helped us dodge a bullet.

Olympic Athlete

ALY RAISMAN

From last summer's London Olympics to her role on Dancing With the Stars, Needham's Aly Raisman's had a big year. In addition to her gold-winning–team captaincy and individual medals on the floor exercise and balance beam, Raisman is one of those Dancing With the Stars competitors who must really annoy the likes of, say Andy Dick. ("Wait, I'm competing against an Olympic champion gymnast?") She and partner Mark Ballas made it to the finale but failed to score a podium finish. On Latin night, however, the duo notched an almost perfect score. And we'll take that as a fine omen for the 2016 Olympics, which are being held in a place that knows a little about rhythm—Rio de Janeiro.

Secret Weapon

AVERY BRADLEY

When it comes to Celtics guards, Rajon Rondo (rightly) gets a lot of attention. But during the past two seasons, Avery Bradley has cemented his own role as a diabolically effective defensive player. This year he was named to the 2012-13 NBA All-Defensive Second Team, holding opposing players to 43.8 percent shooting from the field and 32.8 percent on three-pointers. His smothering defense also caused some of the best players in the league to routinely cough up the ball. And while his offense isn't at Rondo's level, Bradley also improved that aspect of his game in his third year. If he continues on this trajectory, Bradley's abilities won't be a secret much longer.

The Marathon Survivors

It's tragic how many people were injured in the Marathon attacks, but the lowlifes who perpetrated the bombings surely intended to kill more than three people. The fact that they didn't is thanks to the first responders—those people who rushed to the scene and immediately began triage without thought to the possibility of more attacks—and the tireless efforts of medical staff once the victims reached hospitals. Preparing for a mass-casualty event is expensive, but that's how Boston treats the Marathon, and the results speak for themselves. Minutes after chaos, there was order.

Psy

The "Gangnam Style" and "Gentleman" auteur was a Berklee College of Music student, but never got very far with his formal music education, telling SPIN, "I was a freshman for four years." A billion YouTube views later, time will tell whether the appeal of Psy's irony-infused pop antics will outlast his tenure as Berklee's Bluto Blutarsky.

Moustafa Ismail

Last year, this Bay State gas station cashier made the latest Guinness World Records for largest biceps—31 inches, which is slim for a waist but insanely gargantuan for an arm. Ismail doesn't have pythons; he has anacondas, and those anacondas each ate a whole pig. Don't attempt a pump-and-dash at his gas station, or he might curl your car.

Boston institution

MAYOR THOMAS MENINO

Having started in 1993 and now serving his fifth (and, it appears, final) four-year term, Menino is like a one-man representation of Boston itself—pugilistic, ambitious, occasionally difficult to comprehend. Menino's struck out on a few of his grander plans, but his tenure includes some major accomplishments, most notably the creation of the Seaport District on the Boston waterfront, which has metamorphosed from a wasteland of empty lots to a rapidly developing neighborhood. The man has his detractors, but you're going to make some enemies when you're not afraid to pick a fight (see: Menino vs. Chick-fil-A). So what if he can't seem to remember Gronk's name? Whoever succeeds Menino at City Hall has some big shoes to fill. As big as Rob Grabowski's.

Brawl

The Mount Ida College Talent Show Rumble

When a warm-and-fuzzy sounding Office of Diversity and Inclusion holds a talent show, you don't expect it to turn into a 100-person melee that requires responders from five different police agencies to break it up. But that's what happened last fall at Mount Ida College. The show's organizers probably should've been wary when everyone who signed up for the contest listed their talent as "fighting."

Example of Solidarity

The "Shelter in Place" Response

With a terrorist on the loose, the city and some surrounding suburbs shut down in an unprecedented manhunt. While some folks railed that the state was imposing martial law (it wasn't—there was no force of law behind the "shelter in place" request, the unified response of the citizenry actually turned the act of staying indoors into a strategic weapon for the police. Terrorists, even suddenly famous ones, require the hustle and bustle of everyday life to camouflage their movements. Greater Boston denied that, en masse, and it worked. The Internet memes appeared almost immediately, with photos of empty streets captioned to attest to the ornery nature of Bostonians, but beneath the snark was a core of happy truth: When given a sad and serious challenge, the entire city is capable of acting as one to face down a common foe. Even if that foe turned out to be a dumb little jerk hiding in a boat.

Dense Savage Drug Mule

The Guy With the Wheelchair Full of Cocaine

Ah, the ol' coke-in-the-wheelchair gambit. Emmanuelli Rojas-Moraza was arraigned on Christmas Eve last year after trying to smuggle nearly four kilos of cocaine through security at Logan International Airport. When TSA agents drill a hole in your wheelchair tire and white powder comes out, it might be time to reassess your smuggling strategies and stop taking inspiration from Cheech and Chong's van made out of weed.

Lowest Odds for employee of the Year

Annie Dookhan

Fabricating test results, tampering with evidence, potentially tainting thousands of drug convictions—what else could they charge her with, lying on her résumé? In fact, yes. Annie Dookhan single-handedly demonstrated the perils of putting a sole chemist in charge of crucial criminal drug tests, allegedly telling police that sometimes she'd taint a negative test to turn it positive, and other times label a sample positive without testing it at all. But don't worry—she only handled 60,000 tests involving 34,000 defendants. Strange coincidence: She's from Franklin, home of the man with the 31-inch biceps. Maybe we should put him on the case.

A CANOE IN THE HARBOR

Michael Richard Smith has drawn national attention for his unconventional approach to Boston residential living: He paddles a canoe around the Harbor and camps on floating docks. The police are leaving him alone because he isn't breaking any laws—and also because it's not like he's going to inspire an armada of itinerant canoe-dwellers to clog local waters. Said one Yahoo! commenter, "If I lived in a canoe, the first thing I'd do is paddle somewhere warmer."

Whitey Bulger news now that he's on trial. For a place where the next new store is more likely to be a Lululemon than a bail-bond joint, the Hollywood conception of Southie is completely at odds with reality. Except during the St. Paddy's Day parade. That one pretty much delivers on all the stereotypes.

Worst Place to Get Groped

The Filene's Hole

After years of promises, plenty of mayor–developer sniping and the sight of a hole in the middle of a supposedly up-and-coming part of Boston, the city finally found a developer for the massive gap once filled by Filene's. A Twitter handle—@FilenesHole—even documents the construction. Sure, it's another huge building among many that are being planned in the neighborhood, but it's better than the destruction that was left when owners of the site stalled the project in 2008. Nothing says booming economy like filling in negative space with contractor work. Next mission: potholes?

Worst Place to Make Out

On a Fung Wah Bus

We know, we know: The Fung Wah is no more. But until regulators shut down the company in March because of chronic safety violations, those buses were definitely a horrible place to make out. Riding in a vehicle that might be on fire probably doesn't put you in the mood (or maybe it does!). But even a pair of Olympic gymnasts would lack the physical dexterity necessary to sustain a make-out session on a bus that's careening south on Interstate 95 at 75 mph. Other romance-killers: the smell, the heat (summer), the cold (winter) and the fact that the guy across from you might be snacking on... are those chicken beaks? Well, it was Fung Wah it lasted.

Worst Traffic Jam Ever

The Columbus Day Gridlock

As Bostonians, we take strange pride in our awful traffic, but last year's Columbus Day debacle on the Pike was one to tell the grandkids about. We'd like to think that 45-mile traffic jams only happen in faraway lands such as China or Los Angeles, but a combination of accidents and holiday gridlock turned the Pike into a parking lot from Boston to Charlton. How ironic, given that Columbus sailed the ocean blue specifically to avoid the backup at the Strait of Gibraltar.

ANYONE WHO GAVE TO THE ONE FUND

When disasters hit, whether natural or man-made, we're all accustomed to texting a few bucks to help the cause in some remote place. But with the Marathon bombings, the tragedy was personal and local. Enter the One Fund, which was established April 16 and has raised more than $60 million for the victims. Certainly, money has flowed from distant locales, but two of the big donations—a million bucks each—came from New Balance and John Hancock, local companies with deep roots in Boston. And just as everyone knows someone who was there or narrowly escaped, everyone knows someone who's donated to help. Bostonians are often caustic or belligerent toward one another, but the success of the One Fund says that when trouble goes down, we help each other.

Antique Store

Cambridge Antique Market

Where else could you find a '70s sofa, a vintage sequined gown and a box camera, all in one place? Cambridge Antique Market is a mecca for time travelers who delight in writing love letters on worn typewriters or wearing groovy costume jewelry to parties. With four floors of odds and ends, it's easy to get lost looking for something you didn't think you needed.

Bike Shop

Ferris Wheels Bike Shop

Serving cyclists is like a walk in the amusement park for Jeffrey Ferris, owner of this Jamaica Plain mainstay. His expert staff can handle repairs large and small, tuning up rusty brakes, replacing parts or giving your ride a complete overhaul with flashy cruiser bars. The Ferris Wheels crew also leads biweekly road training rides. But the highlight of the store's community events is the free pancake breakfast held in the shop the final Friday of every month. Come for the carbs, stay for the company and leave knowing you'll burn off the calories during the ride home.

Worst Trend

Cropped T-shirts

Some things are better off dead. Take, for example, the '80s and its cropped T-shirt trend. We've all seen the offenders prancing around in leggings, with a KISS logo or leopard plastered across a barely-there T-shirt. Contrary to what the look suggests, these are not nostalgic soccer moms headed to dancercise, but confused slaves to every trend. Where is the sophistication? The creativity? And will someone please explain the appeal of looking like Alex Owens in Flashdance?

BEANTOWN BOOTCAMP

Rain or shine, at the crack of dawn or after a long day's work, a cadre of clients assembles on Canal Street for Beantown Bootcamp. And then the real fun begins: jogging, stair climbing, sprinting, agility training, strengthening exercises and cardio drills until you drop. Owner and 11-time marathoner John Wayman offers intense classes for all levels, and he is merciless. Beantown clients are rewarded with increased energy—and the ability to give past fitness limitations the boot.

Beautiful Act You Can Do

Contribute to the Celeste & Sydney Recovery Fund

Among those injured by the Boston Marathon blasts were mother and daughter Celeste and Sydney Corcoran. Celeste, 47, a hairstylist at Emerge Spa and Salon and a past Boston's Best winner for her beautiful blowouts, lost both legs below the knee. Sydney, 18, suffered arterial damage after being hit by shrapnel. Organizers are raising donations to help defray recovery costs and give mother and daughter some peace of mind. The fund's raised more than $765,000 so far and got a big boost on May 13, when 20-plus local salons and spas banded together to help one of their own, donating services for a Celeste-A-Thon and raising more than $120,000. That's the beauty of giving.

Blowout

Megan Graham Beauty

The perfect blowout requires squeaky-clean hair, the right styling products and a steady hand with the equipment. You'll find it all at Megan Graham's two-year-old salon, where she works her magic one small section of hair at a time. In order to create long-lasting styles for her clients, Megan creates hair product cocktails, including shampoo and conditioner followed by heat protectant and mousse for a soft, movable hold—so once your hair is Megan-approved, you can finally stop fussing with it.

BOSTON LANDMARKS ORCHESTRA

Great Music for Free
July 17 – August 28

7 pm at the DCR's Hatch Shell on the Esplanade

Wednesday, July 17 Opening Night: Rhapsody in Green Christopher Wilkins, conductor / The Landmarks Orchestra's annual green concert, with music celebrating our city, state, and national parks, and honoring the men and women who protect and preserve them.

Wednesday, July 24 For the Ages: A Family Guide to the Orchestra Christopher Wilkins, conductor / The stirring first symphony of Brahms, Britten's guided tour, and the students of the Conservatory Lab Charter School's Dudamel Orchestra alongside the pros, as symphonic music casts its enduring spell on each generation.

Wednesday, July 31 Fiesta sinfónica: A Night in the Tropics Christopher Wilkins, conductor / co-sponsored by IBA-Inquilinos Boricuas en Acción / Two worlds meet in music inspired by Latin American song and dance spanning more than 150 years. The Landmarks Orchestra joins a "pocket-sized salsa orchestra" from Boston's Latino community.

Wednesday, August 7 Boston Lyric Opera David Angus, conductor / This concert will feature exciting and popular excerpts from operas, including The Magic Flute and Rigoletto.

Wednesday, August 14 Longwood Symphony Orchestra — Guest Orchestra Ronald Feldman, conductor / The acclaimed orchestra of Boston's medical community performs with the winner of the Foundation for Chinese Performing Arts Concerto Competition, including works by Beethoven and Dvořák.

Wednesday, August 21 Cole Porter's "Kiss Me Kate" Christopher Wilkins, conductor / in collaboration with Commonwealth Shakespeare Company / Shakespeare meets Broadway meets the Boston Landmarks Orchestra. Two of Boston's premier summer institutions team up at the Hatch Shell in a semi-staged production of Cole Porter's theatrical masterpiece.

Wednesday, August 28 "I Have a Dream" 50th Anniversary Concert Christopher Wilkins, conductor / Boston Landmarks One-City Choir / New England Spiritual Ensemble / co-sponsored by The Museum of African American History / To honor one of the greatest speeches in American history, the orchestra offers Boston's musical tribute to the inspiration and ideas that lie at the heart of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.'s dream.

ASK THE EXPERT

ANNA M. BERIK, DMD

BOSTON'S PREMIER COSMETIC DENTIST

WHAT CAN I DO TO IMPROVE MY SMILE BEFORE MY WEDDING?

■ Get Your Teeth Cleaned - Have a professional cleaning 1-2 weeks before the wedding. Clean and healthy teeth go a long way.

■ In Office Professional Whitening - Professional whitening can make teeth appear up to 6 shades lighter in just1 hour. Store bought whitening strips are not the same. Everyone I see leaves with the "Wow" factor.

■ Straighten Your Teeth - Brides are surprised how little time it takes to straighten their smile. I can make a dramatic difference in as little as six months and it lasts a lifetime.

■ Porcelain Veneers - Porcelain veneers are a terrific option from one tooth to an entire smile. I take my time with each bride as no two cases are exactly alike.

Dr. Anna Berik is the choice of Boston brides seeking picture perfect smiles. She has been creating dream smiles, from simple whitening to "extreme makeovers" for over 20 years.

Your wedding is a once in a lifetime event, and the most photographed day of your life. A healthy, bright confident smile will have the greatest impact of all on your overall appearance. With an improved smile you'll be able to look back at your photographs and be happy with the way you look.

A recent survey asked brides what they wished they had done differently for their wedding, "I could've brightened and improved my smile more" was the overwhelming response. Contact Dr. Berik today to schedule your consultation so you can have that "Picture Perfect Smile" in time for your wedding.

Gentleman's Game

BATTING 1800

EVER WANTED TO TRAVEL back to a time when a pitcher was called a hurler and American ladies all wore bloomers? Grab your pantalets and head over to Georges Island, by way of the 1800s, for a vintage baseball game. Before the Red Sox, the Bambino and seven-figure salaries, old-school Yankees played America's pastime in order to find a little solace from the Civil War. There aren't walks, mitts or compression shirts at this game, just traditional equipment and uniforms. See what happens when two local teams, the Bristol Blues and the Hingham Coopers, meet with their gloves off July 14 on the Boston Harbor island.

MADELEINE COLEMAN

Vintage baseball takes place July 14 at 12 pm, free, Georges Island, Boston (617-223-8666) bostonharborislands.org

Since getting her start punking celebs with Ashton Kutcher on MTV's beloved prank show nearly a decade ago, Whitney Cummings has spent time performing stand-up on the late-night TV circuit, starring in her own sitcom, NBC's now-cancelled Whitney, and creating and writing another sitcom, the CBS hit 2 Broke Girls. Whether she's tweeting comments ("Vine is really helpful in giving us a heads up on who should never be parents") or writing knee-slappers for her show ("Scaring people into participating is not success, it's Scientology"), Cummings delivers humor across media. With nothing to lose but your composure, head to the Fox Theater at Foxwoods Resort Casino on July 20.

Coming to America

Cramped Crib

Director Lynne Sachs proves that all the world really is a stage. In Your Day Is My Night, seven Chinese immigrants use their beds as platforms for telling their stories. In this quasi-documentary, a cast living in tenement-style apartments in New York's congested Chinatown sleep in shifts, splitting their beds with strangers. These immigrants share more than just their beds—they share their American dreams, the struggles they faced in China and daily challenges in the Big Apple. See a different type of bedtime story on July 15 at the Brattle Theatre.

20 Feet From Stardom ★★★★ You sing along with them on the radio all the time, but I bet you've never even heard of these ladies. Morgan Neville's jubilant, long-overdue documentary moves the spotlight from center stage to the unheralded backup singers who have anonymously contributed to our pop-culture consciousness for the past 50-odd years. Darlene Love, whose voice defined Phil Spector's Wall of Sound, was taken advantage of by Spector's shockingly petty (and seemingly criminal) attempts to deny her recognition. Watch out for Merry Clayton, who showed up in a bathrobe with rollers in her hair in the middle of the night to wail on "Gimme Shelter" when the Stones were stuck in a rut. (The shot of Mick Jagger listening to her isolated vocal track is alone worth the price of admission.) Their stories are sad, as showbiz tales often are. But this funny, raucous party of a movie is a celebration, not just of wonderful music but of finally giving credit where it's due. (At Coolidge Corner.)

42 ★★★ Hokey, cornball and pretty much irresistible, writer/director Brian Helgeland's take on Jackie Robinson's first season with the Brooklyn Dodgers is Americana at its crudest and most effective. If it's nuance you seek, look elsewhere, as this is an entertaining inspirational tale, pitched at the level of a children's fable. Not my favorite level, but one upon which the film works marvelously. Chadwick Boseman stars as the legendary ballplayer, bristling with a flinty intelligence as he withstands all sorts of awful discrimination and horrible racist invective. (A rival team manager, played by Alan Tudyk, drops so many N-bombs that somewhere Quentin Tarantino must be raging with jealousy.) Harrison Ford dons caterpillar eyebrows and carves some delicious ham as Branch Rickey, the gruff, avuncular executive who has an answer for everything. Despite the aural atrocities of Mark Isham's pseudo-John Williams musical score, it's impossible not to be moved by 42's blunt call for decency and Robinson's larger-than-life heroics on the baseball field. It got to me—I'm not made of wood. (At West Newton.)

After Earth ★★ This film is hardly the career-ending debacle it's been portrayed as in the celebrity press pig pile, but it is just plain old lousy. A thousand years in the future, Will Smith's aloof, unpleasant and laughably named Cypher Raige attempts to bond with his petulant brat of a son (Jaden Smith) by dragging him along on a routine mission that's abruptly aborted after their spaceship crashes on a hostile, uninhabitable planet. Yes, that would be Earth. The only survivors are a severely injured Raige and his son, as well as a creepy-crawly, pheromone-sniffing beast. With both of the Fresh Prince's legs broken, the boy needs to traverse the unfriendly environment to recover the ship's distress beacon somewhere in the wreckage, battling a bipolar climate and some heavily evolved angry birds. Director M. Night Shyamalan occasionally finds a stripped-down adventure story beneath all the ponderous sci-fi mumbo jumbo, but the movie struggles because of the charmless lead performances and an air of dour portent. You could do worse, but that's not saying much this summer. (In the suburbs.)

The Bling Ring ★★½ A question lingers after Sofia Coppola's sometimes very funny fifth feature. Is this a portrait of generational vapidity or is the film just plain vapid? Attempting to have her cake and eat more too à la Harmony Korine's Spring Breakers, Coppola throws us in with a pack of empty-headed, celebrity-obsessed teens who scored a moment or two of tabloid notoriety by burglarizing Paris Hilton and Lindsay Lohan's houses. As with most Coppola films, The Bling Ring is all lush surfaces, gorgeously empty visuals and unquestioned privilege, but the satirical edge here too often goes missing. Leads Katie Chang and Israel Broussard are presumably this vacant and hollow by design. The movie kicks up a notch every time Emma Watson appears as a pouty bitch goddess with an entitlement complex at least twice the size of Hilton's mansion. Her mom (Leslie Mann, who is acidic as ever) homeschools her girls with a curriculum based on The Secret, and whenever they're on screen the film has a blistering sense of purpose that's otherwise absent. (At Fenway, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Company You Keep ★★½ Robert Redford's latest film—only the ninth he has directed in a career that's spanned some 50-odd years—is a dinosaur. This kind of talky, politically minded adult thriller went out of fashion decades ago. It feels like a relic from another time, which isn't exactly a bad thing. The 76-year-old Sundance kid finds his quiet, upstate New York idyll shattered when a hotshot kid reporter (Shia LaBeouf) figures out he's a former member of the Weather Underground who has been wanted by the FBI for these past few decades in connection with a bank robbery gone wrong. So he goes on the lam again, which is basically just an excuse for Redford to traverse the country and have uneasy reunions with a spectacular array of aging Hollywood royalty. There's a valedictory tone to the picture, with this bunch of old pros delivering bittersweet nostalgia riffs. It's hell on the pacing but wonderful to watch. Redford obviously knows a thing or two about movie-star iconography, and deploys the who's-who supporting cast accordingly. (In the suburbs.)

Fast & Furious 6 ★★★ ½ Most movies are dumb, but very few are so smart about being so dumb. Up-and-coming indie director Justin Lin was brought on board to revive the sputtering Fast and Furious franchise for 2006's surprisingly sleek Tokyo Drift. Vin Diesel and Paul Walker had bailed for bigger and better things that never quite happened, only to return with their tails tucked between their legs after Lin took a page from late-1980s Hong Kong movies and turned this street-racing saga into soap-opera sprawl that more often than not feels like the best John Woo movie John Woo never made. Dripping with testosterone, kitschy machismo and unironic sincerity, these are bombastic pictures that go so far over the top that I don't think anybody involved even knows where the top is anymore. The latest pits our ever-expanding, unprecedentedly diverse cast against a sinister gang who are after something in a briefcase that nobody even bothers to explain. It's just a delivery system for expertly choreographed chase sequences and bare-knuckle brawls. Spectacular. (At Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Great Gatsby ★★ Australian dynamo and short-attention-span enthusiast Baz Luhrmann never found anything he couldn't turn tacky. So after the Hawaiian-shirt-clad hash he made out of Romeo + Juliet and the pillaging of 30 years of pop culture via massacred song snippets in Moulin Rouge comes his bizarre take on The Great Gatsby. It's a long, chintzy 3-D muddle based on a book that's not particularly suited to movies, but Leonardo DiCaprio happens to be amazing. The 1920s Jazz Age is scored to Jay-Z. Every party in the Hamptons looks like a live MTV report from Spring Break, all bumping and grinding, and the anachronisms clang like a broken church bell. But DiCaprio works wonders in a movie that's otherwise distracted by small, shiny objects. He's hooked on affectations, a millionaire pretender to the throne who came from nothing and thus always seems to be sinking in quicksand when confronted with high society's betters. This is a great performance. Too bad everything else about the film is rather awful. (At West Newton and in the suburbs.)

The Hangover Part III ★ ½ This grim, determinedly unpleasant threequel to 2009's surprise smash was a contractual obligation for all involved, and their contempt radiates from the screen in waves. The Hangover Part II was the kind of sequel that retroactively undoes your affection for the previous picture, whorishly recycling jokes and situations that were hilarious the first time around but now just feel like pandering. Part III doesn't even bother with jokes. It's a straight-up, sometimes shockingly violent action movie in which our returning wolf pack is kidnapped and forced at gunpoint to head back to Vegas and track down Ken Jeong's Asian minstrel. Bradley Cooper stands around shouting obscenities and complaining about how stupid the plot is, to a point where it doesn't feel like acting. Ed Helms all but disappears, and Zach Galifianakis has officially worn out his welcome. Director Todd Phillips stages the set pieces with a real visual brio, ignoring any pretense of comedy and treating the film like an audition reel for the next Die Hard movie. Everyone here, including the audience, would clearly rather be doing something else. (In the suburbs.)

Iron Man 3 ★★★ In the awkward position of making both a sequel to a movie nobody liked (Iron Man 2) and one that everybody loved (The Avengers), director Shane Black and Robert Downey Jr. just split the difference and made Iron Man 3 a sort of sequel to their barely seen 2005 Kiss Kiss Bang Bang instead. This is a ripping little detective yarn, occasionally punctuated with obligatory soulless special effects sequences required by the genre. "I'm just a man in a can," Tony Stark sighs to lady love Pepper Potts (a game Gwyneth Paltrow). And the secret to Iron Man 3's success is keeping Downey out of that can for as much of the movie as possible. At the end of the day, Iron Man 3 is still a comic book blockbuster and thus needs to end with a patience-trying half-hour or so of flying, computer-generated robot suits blowing up a whole bunch of crap. But the smirky, sardonic sensibility smuggled in by Black is almost enough to cure the summertime blues. (In the suburbs.)

The Kings of Summer ★★★ Director Jordan Vogt-Roberts' debut is a slick piece of work that juts out at just enough odd angles to be idiosyncratic, but never alienating. The Kings of Summer stars newcomers Nick Robinson and Gabriel Basso as best friends who have just barely survived the humiliation of their freshman year in high school. Driven mad by their parents, the two decide to run away and build a cabin in the woods. It's a little boy's fantasy of roughing it in the great outdoors, living off the land and growing some comically pubescent excuse for facial hair. But the best, most surreal flourish is that so nowhere along the way our heroes have managed to pick up a pal named Biaggio. Played by Moises Arias, he's an elfin, non sequitur–spouting sprite with oversized features and the haunted stare of a man 40 years his senior. He's the best third-wheel comic relief in a teen movie since Superbad's McLovin. It's an amusing, low-stakes film with modest aspirations that are, for the most part, achieved. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Man of Steel ★★★ Brows furrowed when Dark Knight guru Christopher Nolan and Sucker Punch director Zack Snyder announced they were rebooting the saga of America's favorite illegal immigrant. I don't think anyone needs to see Kal-El conflicted with Batman's trendy neurosis. The drab color scheme and handheld photography feel like concessions to a fashionable "gritty" aesthetic, but otherwise I'm relieved to report that this is the same old Superman. Played with a wonderful, forthright decency by newcomer Henry Cavill, the Man of Tomorrow begins the film as an anonymous drifter, trying to hide his superpowers in a succession of go-nowhere jobs and dodging pesky Daily Planet reporter Lois Lane (Amy Adams). It's only when a crew of Kryptonian supervillains come threatening Armageddon that he finally busts out the cape and takes flight. The fractured flashback chronology is sometimes awkward, but Man of Steel boasts some terrific performances, particularly by Superman's two dads—Russell Crowe and Kevin Costner. The apocalyptic smackdowns suffer from CGI overload, but the movie is big-hearted and sincere. Just like its hero. (At Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Much Ado About Nothing ★ ½ This larky little Shakespeare adaptation, whipped up by Joss Whedon and his regular TV stock company during a 12-day break on The Avengers, is literally a home movie, filmed in Whedon's own house. Why not unwind from the stress of a massive blockbuster shoot by inviting all your old friends over to riff on the Bard's funniest play? Problem is that, even by home-movie standards, it's a terrible film, indifferently photographed on smeary, consumer-grade black-and-white digital video. Much Ado shovels mass quantities of iambic pentameter into the mouths of untrained third-string television actors, most of whom appear to have learned their lines phonetically. Not since Baz Luhrmann's Romeo + Juliet have I been so convinced that a cast had no idea what they were saying. These folks might as well be speaking Klingon. It's all buffoonish clowning around, sexy-time pantomimes and drunken dances. The barn door–sized performance by Alexis Denisof might be my new least favorite thing ever. I kept waiting for him to slip on a banana peel. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

Now You See Me ★★ ½ If you stop and think about anything that happens in this movie, you'll realize none of it makes a lick of sense, but you'll probably be too tickled to care. This sleeper hit stars Jesse Eisenberg, Woody Harrelson, Isla Fisher and Dave Franco as a quartet of Las Vegas magicians who punch up their act by robbing banks while they're onstage. Impossible, you say? Maybe. Professional magic debunker Morgan Freeman has a grand old time taunting exasperated FBI agent Mark Ruffalo with all the tricks of the trade, as the increasingly improbable smoke-and-mirrors act escalates to a rather enjoyable level of absurdity. Director Louis Leterrier keeps the camera swooping and the pace tight, understanding that a moment's contemplation will topple this whole thing like a house of cards. The game cast is well into the silly spirit, with kudos going to Eisenberg's patented nerd-bully routine and Harrelson's mischievous smirk. Ruffalo's fuming indignation suggests he should probably play the Jackie Gleason role when they inevitably remake Smokey and the Bandit. (At Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Plimpton! Starring George Plimpton as Himself ★★★ The father of "participatory journalism" gets a loving, fittingly witty tribute from local filmmakers Tom Bean and Luke Poling. It could be argued that George Plimpton left a bigger mark as editor and publisher of The Paris Review, but we find out here that he ran that legendary publication at a loss, subsidized fully by his increasingly cartoonish attempts to tackle the least likely of professions. There's tweedy, academic Plimpton playing for the Detroit Lions, and there he is on drums with the New York Philharmonic. This was a great gimmick, but what made it more than that was Plimpton's remarkable reportage. This movie finally makes a case for his work to stand as social studies rather than mere publicity stunt. (Truth be told, it was probably a little bit of both.) Combing through what must be hundreds of hours of footage, Bean and Poling take

This Is the End ★★ ½ One time there was this great party at James Franco's house that got ruined by the rapture. Or at least that's the idea of this wildly self-indulgent, occasionally hilarious shambles from writer/directors Seth Rogen and Evan Goldberg. A sprawling cast of Hollywood's most self-deprecating comics star as themselves, with Jay Baruchel visiting from Canada and not so secretly resenting childhood buddy Rogen's douchey new movie star pals. Playing comically exaggerated versions of their offscreen personas, Rogen's the affable pothead, Franco's a pompous pseudo-intellectual and Jonah Hill oozes passive-aggressive smarm. And then the world ends. It's the same cheerfully vulgar bromance dynamic you'd expect from the writers of Superbad, with an added element of the apocalypse. The best jokes here revolve around just how pampered and useless actors are in a crisis, while looters and natural disasters are no match for the destructive power of Danny McBride. Too heavy on the improvisation and at least half an hour too long, This Is the End is also often quite terribly funny. (At Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

World War Z ★★ ½ After all the troubled production rumors, delayed release dates and reshoots, producer/star Brad Pitt's $200 million zombie apocalypse movie finally arrives, and I guess it's all right. Throwing out most of the Max Brooks book from which the film takes its title, World War Z gives Pitt the Tom Cruise role as humanity's last hope after a killer virus turns everybody into frothing, herky-jerky monsters. As a retired United Nations investigator inexplicably called back to work to combat this crushing epidemic, Pitt furrows his brow and gives one of his blander leading-man performances. His job seemingly is to trot around the world witnessing wild, extravagantly elaborate scenes of devastation while being smarter and more handsome than everybody else. It's an eye-popping spectacle, and weirdly remote. Only in the film's third act (notoriously taken over by an entirely different creative team) does the movie really cook, trapping key characters in an enclosed location with clearly defined goals for one corker of a white-knuckle suspense sequence. Memo to Hollywood: Less is more. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Deaf Jam Recording

Metal Men

Deafheaven's brand of black metal is like a fine barrel-aged whiskey—it's easy to get accidentally drunk on those rough sounds, smoothed by cool piano but biting with rollicking guitar splits that somehow suggest easy listening. Formed in 2010, the San Francisco–based group combines lashing vocals with the heavy instrumentals you'd expect from a band signed to record label Deathwish Inc. The band's sophomore album, Sunbather, a post-rock/black metal hybrid released last month, was named one of the year's most anticipated by SPIN. Take the boys of Deafheaven for a spin yourself on July 3 at T.T. the Bear's Place.

Jeremy Ackman

Free Fallin'

Head in the Clouds

Managing stressful situations takes a careful balance of sympathy and sensitivity—or, in the case of Illuminations, the new art exhibit in the Massachusetts General Hospital Cancer Center, balance of another sort. Boston-based photographer Jeremy Ackman takes imagery to new heights with "Into the Sky," his series of photographs capturing divers gracefully posed in midair. The photos, part of a rotating exhibit that displays works from different artists, transform a once-lackluster waiting room into a gallery that can provide a welcome distraction for patients and relatives. Illuminations lights up the MGH Cancer Center through Sept. 20.

Books & Poetry

Necessary Evil

The Superantihero

If it were up to Chuck Klosterman, most heroes would remain unsung. A provocative, humorous examination of the notion of villainy, the essays collected in I Wear the Black Hat question society's perception of what it means to be a bad guy. Klosterman contemplates points like how we assign the label "evil," the reasons for doing so and why good-looking scoundrels have a bigger fan base than their equally malicious but less-attractive peers. Join the author of The New York Times Magazine's "The Ethicist" column and root for Darth Vader and other antiheroes on July 11 at Porter Square Books.

ATTENTION BOUNTY HUNTERS!
BONUS POINTS AND A TUB OF MAKEUP REMOVER TO ANYONE WHO CAN CAPTURE AN IMPROPER READER TESTING OUT BRUSHES AT THE WORLD BODYPAINTING FESTIVAL IN PÖRTSCHACH, AUSTRIA, THROUGH JULY 7.

Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip. Where did you take us? Send us a picture of you or a buddy, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you went. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed IMPROPER Sightings.

During a visit to Tobago Cays in St. Vincent and the Grenadines, Valerie Smith nearly went overboard for The Improper.

While reading our Chefs issue in New Orleans, Gina Tembenis learned that Kristen Kish has a much different use for pigskin.

In Seoul, South Korea, Mary Pearce and Anthony Chi asked for a hotel room with plenty of ventilation.

American Idol winner Taylor Hicks holds The Improper as well as he can hold a note.

Send high-resolution digital photos (at least 500K file size) to sightings@improper.com. Please include the exact photo location, full names of all people pictured, your phone number and your e-mail address. All photos become the property of THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN MAGAZINE.

After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

JOE'S AMERICAN BAR & GRILL [9 locations in the Boston greater area, visit joesamerican.com] Joe's serves classic American comfort food in a comfortable setting, making it a local favorite for lunch, dinner, weekend brunch or take-out. Everything is made in-house, from the famous clam chowder to their juicy burgers or fall-off-the bone ribs. With carved wood, stained glass and vintage lighting, Joe's is reminiscent of your favorite New England watering hole. Try the bloody mary or one of their local beers on tap.

JOSE MCINTYRE'S [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Jose McIntyre's is located across from the Aquarium on Milk Street. This is Boston's only Mexican-Irish restaurant and bar. For close to two decades Jose's has been an institution with the after work and late night party crowds. If the Dos Equis man is the world's most interesting man, Jose McIntyre is the world's most entertaining. Come experience the most unique venue in Boston. With 5 rooms, 3 bars, 2 floors and a game room; José is the perfect place to unwind with co-workers or host a celebration.

RESTAURANTS

ABE & LOUIE'S [793 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-536-6300, abeandlouies.com] Abe & Louie's is the quintessential American steakhouse, serving prime cuts of corn fed, Midwestern beef, fresh seafood and garden produce. Steaks are aged on the bone for six weeks to ensure maximum flavor. Signature dishes include the bone-in filet mignon, NY sirloin and swordfish chop. With its high quality food, outstanding service and classic interiors, this award-winning restaurant has consistently remained a Boston favorite since its debut in 1998.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features dinner, made from scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and [illegible] Mother Sweeney's corned beef [illegible] recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makem, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a [illegible] member of an Irish rock [illegible]

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

DOUZO MODERN JAPANESE RESTAURANT & LOUNGE [131 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-859-8886.] Douzo is a Modern Japanese Restaurant and Lounge located in Boston's Back Bay/South End neighborhood. A beautiful and modern decor to complement a wide range of traditional and innovative menu items. Serving only the freshest and highest quality ingredients available for the best taste. Valet parking is available Wednesday through Saturday and validated parking for the adjoining parking garage after 5pm. Take-out and delivery offered daily as well with pre-packed sushi Monday through Sunday.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $.Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

N DANCER AND BLITZ'N

Twinkling Toes

George Balanchine once said, "I don't want dancers who want to dance. I want dancers who need to dance." That was pretty much the case on multiple fronts at the Boston Ballet's Balanchine Ball, held at the Park Plaza Castle.

The décor was stunning, the food was described as "faboosh" by one attendee, the evening raised a boatload of dough to support the ballet's education programs and most importantly, there was plenty of dancing—by the company during dinner and by the guests well into the wee hours.

The evening attracted honorees Eleanor and Frank Pao, emcee and ABC News anchor Tanya Rivero, board chair Jack Meyer, stunner Eve Rounds, English rose Ruth Littlechild and the dashing John, maestro Jonathan McPhee, Boston Pops maestro mama Emiley Lockhart, iconoclastic Brahmin Sukey Forbes, the absurdly beautiful Caroline Humphrey and the rest of her clan, tireless balletomane Janet Tobin, Hungarian Valkyrie Ildiko Varhelyi, Brazilian smoke-show Paulo Arrais, statuesque brunette Christine McCormick and her handsome other half, Jeff, the improbably tall John Osbon and the impossibly beautiful Andrea, pint-sized perfection Nina Fialkow and the ever-affable David, babe-a-licious entrepreneur Deena Giancotti, whirling dervish Andy Levine, über-suave hotelier Rajesh Khubchandani (say that three times fast), and one woman who said, "What's not to like about watching ballet while eating lobster tail?"

Cocktails and kibitzing was followed by dinner and dancing, with a live auction and performances by the company in between. Then came the after-party, where mere mortals got to get down with some of the world's most elite dancers.

Or, as one guest put it: "I love this party because I get to grope all the guys I drool over from the audience."

Cush and Tripp Donelan at Cru for the James Beard Foundation dinner

Chow Time!

There's only one answer when someone invites you to a wine dinner to benefit the James Beard Foundation at Cru on Nantucket, and the answer is: "Yes, please."

That's why so many posh people were on hand when chef Erin Zircher teamed up with her colleague from Straight Wharf, Mayumi Hattori, and Neil Hudson of Bartlett's Farm, to create a four-course feast to accompany wines by Donelan.

Front and center were Tripp and Cush Donelan, longtime Nantucketers whose family owns the winery, their très-chic mother, Chris, the fit-as-a-fiddle Mark Goldweitz, Cru cutie Carlos Hidalgo, gentleman farmer John Bartlett, hangover-producing Chicken Box proprietor Packy Norton, Beard Foundation beauty Julie Marshall, person of interest Gene Mahon, construction mogul Tommy Arena, island filmmaker Dan Driscoll, island heartthrob Rob Cocuzzo, Million Dollar Listing builder Dwyer Maloney, Cape Cod seafood kingpin Tato Rodriguez and so on and so forth.

It goes without saying that dinner was delicious, and everyone left feeling fat and happy, except for those of us who stayed longer than we probably should have and ended up adding drunk to the mix. ×××

In Memoriam

Her husband may have been the famous novelist, but there was no better storyteller than Joan Parker, whose death after a brave battle with cancer left a gaping hole in the hearts of everyone who knew her, as well as in Boston's philanthropic community. A brilliant raconteur and a staunch and loyal friend, she was wildly funny, irreverent, unpretentious and tremendous fun to be around. At 80, she could rock a pair of stilettos like a supermodel and had an unerring ability to pull off the edgiest of fashions, but was the absolute antithesis of vain. A hardworking partner to her husband, Robert B. Parker, she carried on his legacy after his death, and was a fiercely devoted mother to sons David (a dancer) and Daniel (an actor). Her true life's work, however, was helping others. Community Servings, the Theater Offensive, and countless other nonprofits would have been worse off without her roll-up-your-sleeves hard work and enormous generosity of spirit. At its 2012 gala, the American Repertory Theater recognized her with its inaugural Angel Award. Now, she's become one. But the big red lipstick mark she left on this city will never fade.

The IMPROPER

Words, Words, Words

The devil has a sense of the fitting. I remembered this the other day when I was flipping through the stations on my car radio and it refused to play anything except Robin Thicke's "Blurred Lines," a song that probably causes syphilis. Although I dislike it for its punctuating helium squeals, it's the grating lyrics that really annoy me, although these are admittedly sung in a helium squeal. So for my sins as a writer, every preprogrammed playlist in the metro area was stuck on "What do we need steam for/ You the hottest b* in this place," and, memorably, "I know you want it/ I know you want it/ I know you want it." And repeat.

Adam DeTour

The pen may not be mightier than the sword, but words can get under your skin. Ask any tattoo artist. In this issue, we celebrate a milestone in our first-ever use of the word "zungenblutwurst." It's in a dining column from MC Slim JB, whose review also includes the evocative "knödel." While Germanic dinners sound impressively concrete, many words can be malleable. So when Lady Bracknell says, "A handbag?" it can signal astonishment, scorn or sanctimony. When Robin Thicke sings, "Hey hey hey/ You wanna hug me?/ Hey hey hey/ What rhymes with hug me?" it might mean something naughty, but probably just means he can't rhyme and turn the damn radio off already. Aren't words fun?

The pith of this issue is music, and fresh, descriptive words about music are hard to string together. Suffice to say that the 10 bands Paul Robicheau meets in his annual roundup are all at the peak of their talents, while cover subject Della Mae is to bluegrass what jägerschnitzel is to the humble pork chop.

Drumming Up Business

FOR THE LAST 13 YEARS, SJC Drums has been building kits in the same way that Johnny Cash built Cadillacs—one piece at a time. "My brother, Scott, was the one to really dissect drums," says Mike Ciprari, 28, co-founder of this Dudley shop specializing in custom drums. "Between the two of us, we had a pretty good concept of design/creativity and fundamentals/manufacturing. Coupled with our passion for drums and music, we just went nuts with it."

It began as a bootstrap operation. The boys, still in high school at the time, took over some space in their grandma's basement, where the would-be company held its headquarters for the next seven years before moving to a workshop nearby and hiring a crew to help keep up with the demand. The business was well under way at that point, having picked up the Aquabats drummer Ricky Fitness and others as clients.

Each piece can take up to six months to craft, depending on the specs. The SJC builders have created kits for artists across just about every genre—punk (Matt Kelly, Dropkick Murphys), funk rock (Sheel Dave, Bad Rabbits), pop (Nick Jonas, Jonas Brothers), folk (Nigel Powell, Frank Turner), hip-hop (Charles Haynes, drummer for names like Kanye West and M.I.A.) and alt-rock (Andy Warren, the Mowgli's).

The one who got away? "Buddy Rich, if he were still around," says Ciprari, who cites the bandleader and jazz musician as one drummer for whom he'd have loved to build a kit.

SJC carries some 1,700 artists under its brand—a long way from high-school afternoons spent in Grandma's basement. "I just started contacting our friends' bands and favorite bands, asking if they'd want us to build them a custom kit," Ciprari recalls. "And it worked."

WHAT'S IN A NAME

WHEN THE PEOPLE behind Mistral (and Sorellina, Teatro, Mooo, etc.) decided to open a seafood restaurant, it took just a few days to realize that the project's initial name—Columbus Fish & Oyster—simply wouldn't do. It sounded "too casual," says Mark D'Alessandro, director of operations for the Columbus Hospitality Group. And so a more suitable moniker was found: Ostra, which means "oyster" in Spanish.

"The deal fell into place quickly, according to D'Alessandro, coming together as soon as the Charles Street location's previous occupant, Avila, closed. The revamped design will be "very elegant," executed in sophisticated black and white, with saddle leather banquettes and a dining room enlarged to seat 115. In the kitchen, chef Mitch Randall, currently executive chef at Mistral, will take charge. (Note that Mistral shouldn't miss a step; executive sous-chef Jason Maynard has been promoted to fill Randall's shoes.) Conceptualized with input from CHG chef/owner Jamie Mammano, the menu is still a work in progress, but perhaps a hint can be found in Randall's recent dish at Mistral: pan-roasted native halibut with chanterelle and zucchini blossom risotto and sweet summer corn. Expect an opening in early fall.

Yet another well-known chef is opening a restaurant in Newton, this time in the city's Newtonville neighborhood. Paul Turano, chef/owner of Arlington's Tryst, expects to unveil Cook by mid-August. Located in the former space of Lam's, Cook's kitchen will be led by Anne Moynihan (Tryst's former pastry chef) and Anthony Welch. Turano is a bit skittish when it comes to describing the menu, because he doesn't want to be "labeled," but says to expect "a great pork chop done right, or a veggie sandwich." Or pizza from the wood- and gas-fired pizza oven. Or a burger or taco, all at reasonable price points. "I want it to be a great neighborhood spot, where the food's dressed up but you don't have to be," he says.

AB FAB

Fenmore American Bistro (FAB, its creators hope) is slated to open at the end of July in the Boston Hotel Buckminster, a block from FENway. In KenMORE Square. Has the portmanteau ever been used before? A resounding no, from the bistro's general manager, George Michalik.

The neologism heralds the latest entrant in the "Fenmore" foodie scene, burgeoning within the past few years from flagbearer Eastern Standard to Island Creek Oyster Bar, Citizen Public House, Basho, Tasty Burger, Sweet Cheeks, Barrio Cantina and more, all within a few blocks of the upscaled ballpark.

To this hotspot neighborhood comes FAB, replacing Maluken, a forgotten Asian restaurant that catered mainly to a late-night college karaoke crowd. Seating 80 in a modern wooden decor, the room features niches of backlit archival photos of the city from the Boston Public Library collection along with antique baseball posters and memorabilia. The real piece of memorabilia, however, is the building itself. This 116-year-old structure by famous architect Stanford White was where the plot was hatched for the infamous Black Sox scandal of 1919, when the Chicago White Sox threw the World Series. The jazz nightclub Storyville thrived in the hotel basement in the 1950s, while WRKO, later occupying the quarters, became the first Boston radio station to go entirely rock in 1967.

Chef Loren Schrader brings a suitcase of all-American experience to the kitchen, having worked everywhere from Hawaii to West Virginia before landing here. The menu is "limited but select," Michalik says. It features local products, says Schrader, like cheeses from Great Blue Hill and Boggy Meadow Farm in New Hampshire, Fazenda coffee from Jamaica Plain, and a Boston cream pie made in-house from a 1930s recipe. Dishes include pub fare such as Maine lobster sliders ($20), Cobb salad with bourbon bacon ($12) and Angus beef burgers made from chopped sirloin and short ribs ($12).

The beer and wine bar will feature eight drafts, local bottles and a Cruvinet system of 16 wines. "We can't compete with the Yard House," Michalik said, referring to another neighborhood newcomer, "but there's a nice variety. We hope to get a full license soon."

Q&A

TAKING NOTES

Every summer, the Boston Landmarks Orchestra performs free concerts. Its music director, Christopher Wilkins, tunes us in to their work.

Why are nonprofit arts programs so important?

We've become very numerical, very quantitative, very comparative and competitive, and the arts sector provides something completely different. It's sort of the ability to revel in what moves us, what triggers emotional responses, what makes life fuller and richer, but in ways that you can't quantify. In the school systems, I think the pendulum has definitely swung back the other way. There was certainly a time when math, science, reading and writing skills were pretty much it. And I think it's really shifted back again toward a complete human being.

You've been a guest conductor in different cities around the world. How does performing in Boston compare?

You know that you're in a community where the standards are high, the experience and knowledge base is high, and so there are so many people who appreciate what you're doing. I always feel like whether we're performing outdoors on the Esplanade, or in the neighborhoods somewhere, that we're making contact with all different segments of the community, and everywhere you turn there are people who remember Arthur Fiedler in the Hatch Shell or had some experience playing in the youth orchestra themselves. You're always near people who've had deep appreciation of music.

What's the energy like at the Hatch Shell?

There's nothing quite like it. For one thing, just its physical beauty, the fact that it's both in the heart of the city, but also a world away. The John Hancock tower, you can almost reach out and touch it, and Fenway Park is right behind you and sometimes you know that the cars flying by are on their way to see the Red Sox game. Look across the river to MIT and the Museum of Science. You know that you're right in the middle of one of the great cities of the world, but you're surrounded by greenery. People out taking a stroll, the sailboats are out on the river, joggers are moving up and down. So that creates a really wonderful interaction between the music itself and the setting that we're in. And I think of all the possible concert spaces in Boston, the Hatch Shell has that duality most wonderfully. And that interaction between the sound and the site we play in is built into our name, the Boston Landmarks Orchestra, because our founder, Charles Ansbacher, recognized that music makes the space more alive, but that the venue also affects your experience of the music.

Spanish Armada

Spanish red wine has emerged as one of those categories that savvy wine geeks on a budget just trust. Why? In two words: old vines. The consistency is ridiculous. OK, so you can't remember their names because there are no big brands, and you can't remember the grape varieties because they're, well, somewhat obscure. But that's why Spanish reds are such good values. If you like great flavor but refuse to overpay, consider acquiring one or more of these gems.

BORSAO TINTO
CAMPO DE BORJA, 2012
($9, Busa Wine & Spirits)
This has been a favorite of mine for years, and it never disappoints. Made with the exuberantly juicy garnacha grape—the world's most underrated varietal—it's got a big, rich texture, a hint of cola-like flavor, some spicy clove accents and virtually no tannins. You can cool this down a bit and quaff with confidence on the hottest days.

BESO DE VINO "SELECCIÓN"
CARIÑENA, 2010
($11, Sav-Mor Liquors, Somerville)
From Cariñena near the Pyrenees foothills, this luscious beauty is mostly syrah blended with 15 percent garnacha. It's got the consistency and flavor of plum jam, with some baking spices, licorice and espresso to round it out. Like the Borsao, it shows no oak influence, but you won't miss it.

PROTOS "TINTO FINO"
RIBERA DEL DUERO, 2010
($14, Whole Foods, Cambridge)
Now we've entered Ribera del Duero: serious tempranillo territory, the world of the oak-aged grown-up big boys. With a hint of mushroom, root vegetables and dried berries on the nose, Protos has a leathery, smoky black fruit flavor and a long finish. This is ideal for grilled herb-rubbed chicken or pheasant. Pour it 30 minutes before drinking.

ACÚSTIC CELLER "ACÚSTIC"
MONTSANT, 2010
($23, Nine East Wine Emporium)
Montsant is a high-elevation district in Catalonia with mineral-heavy soils that makes intense and powerful wines. Layered with wildflowers and blueberry, this one boasts a rich, mocha-like flavor, a touch of bacon and a fruity yet robust, steak-ready finish.

BORSAO TRES PICOS
CAMPO DE BORJA, 2011
($17, Marty's Fine Wines)
This is the upgrade from Borsao, made in the same place by the same company and grown at super high elevations of more than 2,000 feet. And you can tell. It's got a smoky tension with good vibrancy and even a lingering sweetness on the palate. Nice and refined, it's ripe in body, has very integrated tannins. Don't worry, no need to decant or "open" this one.

Impersonals RANT RIGHT

TO ALL WHO TOOK OFFENSE AT MY IMPERSONAL COMPLAINING ABOUT PEOPLE COMPLAINING A FEW WEEKS BACK: OK, I seem to have struck a nerve here. If folks really are just trying to write funny little rants about everyday life, then I truly apologize because I have missed the entire point. Humor is often the only way to make the best of a bad situation (see The Daily Show, The Colbert Report, etc.). So, feel free to grumble, whine, carp, grouse, criticize, find fault, kick up a fuss, raise a stink, bellyache, beef, sound off, gripe and kvetch all you want. I would ask, though, that like "Good people can complain, too" in the Outdoors issue, you volunteer your time if you can, donate your money (if you have enough) to good causes and generally try to make the world a better place because you were part of it.

Not actually as "grateful for problems"

To the jerk who ripped off the 1-inch round Marine Corps sticker from the back window of my car on Comm. Ave: That sticker was in memory of my recently deceased father who fought in Vietnam and then was a police detective for 20 years. I'm sure seeing that small emblem bothered you so much that you just had to remove it to make yourself feel better. My father served in the Marines as well as in the police to give you the right to be the classless loser you turned out to be. By the way, I'll be replacing it with a nice big USMC sticker. Just try removing that one.

Stuck on the issue

To Mr. Little Toy Scooter: I'm not sure what your problem is, but I was on Clarendon Street looking for parking. When I found one on the same side I was driving, I signaled and slowed to a stop so I could back in. I guess you were annoyed that I decided to do this legal maneuver and you had to go around me on your little toy motor scooter. You beeped at me with your little toy horn and gestured at me. When I beeped you back, you stopped, turned and glared at me. What an imposing sight you were on your little toy scooter! What it must be like to putt around town on a little scooter with such an attitude!

LATIN LOVE

NAME: Watermelon Sangria

PRICE: $7

INVENTOR: El Centro owner Allan Rodriguez

INGREDIENTS: Pinot grigio, watermelon, Champagne, rum, triple sec, orange and grapefruit juice

ORIGIN: "My father used to sell sangria at his restaurant in Mexico," Rodriguez says. Then, while visiting his homeland not long ago, Rodriguez encountered an especially succulent watermelon. Inspiration struck. "It was so juicy. I said, 'Instead of using orange and other fruits, why not use this in sangria?' "

TECHNIQUE: "I make it in oak barrels and stir it with a big wooden spoon." Then Rodriguez ages it for 24 hours before serving. The glass is rimmed with chili powder and sugar.

FLAVOR: Surprisingly nuanced. The oak grounds the watermelon's delicacy, while the grapefruit's viscous character keeps the drink from tasting washed out. There's a nip of sugar from the rum in the finish, while the chili on the rim gives it spark. This is the Platonic summer drink, especially if you're eating something with spice.

WARNING: You'll drink this too fast.

PAIR IT WITH: Fish tacos or salmon salad for a light summer meal. For a heavier foundation, try one of the entrees cooked and presented on a hot lava stone, like shrimp with tequila sauce.

PHILOSOPHY: "I bring to my restaurant what we eat at home," Rodriguez says. "People who walk in say it's not fancy, but it's authentic. I'd have to travel to Mexico to eat our food!"

IRONY: Yes, it's sangria in a Mexican restaurant. We live in multicultural times.

CONCLUSION: Why didn't Rick Bayless think of this?

Good Eats

Special Delivery

Ramen might be hot right now, but between sell-out pop-ups, late-night-only specials, and down-the-street lines, it can be hard to land a good bowl. Joe Emiro, Cambridge School of Culinary Arts instructor and proprietor of Boston Ramen Noodle Company, hopes to change all that. Based in the South End, his one-man operation makes real-deal ramen—with 18-hour pork broth and homemade alkaline noodles—and delivers it to your door. Even better, if you give him several hours (or ideally, a day's notice), he'll show up at any time of day or night. That quality and convenience comes at a cost: $18 to $25, depending on your protein of choice. But the offerings are fancy and inventive (think skirt steak with whipped avocado, pork belly with pineapple gastrique, or butter-poached lobster), extras like a five-minute duck egg are gratis, and delivery is included.

Head Bang

Danish manufacturer Bang & Olufsen is in the business of bringing music to your ears. And with this month's release of the H6 headphones, there's plenty to croon about. The over-ear headset features elements fundamental to Danish design, incorporating sleek minimalist construction that promotes functionality and aesthetics in equal parts.

B&O partnered with mechanical engineer/industrial designer Jakob Wagner to craft the set, which uses memory foam inside the lambskin-coated ear pads for a customized fit and a cowhide headband that adapts well to the sort of stretch and wear that headphones need to withstand. The pads block outside sound without trapping the eardrums, diminishing the awful cupped-air feeling that noise-canceling headphones cause.

Internally, the H6 incorporates neodymium magnets, a bass port and drivers positioned to enhance sound direction so that you catch the heavy bass lines, and the built-in microphone and track changer make navigating any set list as easy as check-one-two-three. But it's the dual earpiece jacks that really steal the show—invite a friend to don these headphones with you to immediately escape into a private concert, led by the musician of your choice.

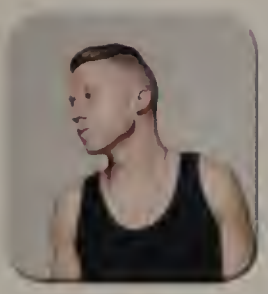
Who could have guessed that a mistress to an 18th-century French king, Madame de Pompadour, would inspire the coiffed 'dos of a few charming fellows topping charts today? Jennifer Ng, advanced designer and men's specialist at Salon Eva Michelle, gives us tips on how to achieve contemporary twists on the revolutionary style.

RICHARD STILE

Bruno Mars

For men with textured hair like Mars, the game plan is to control movement. Use a liquigel to create hold by working it into the roots, and then shape the hair to the desired height by brushing the strands back while the product dries. The key here is to not over-brush, or you'll get Mars' other signature look: the fro.

USE: Sebastian Professional Texturizer



Adam Levine

Although you may not be partying all night with Victoria's Secret angels, you can get that same bedhead-esque hair. Clay adds definition and texture with a small amount of product, so it won't look like you've been standing in front of a mirror for hours. Take the clay in your hands and work the product through the hair evenly before using your fingers to get the desired shape. Who knows, it might even earn you some wings.

USE: American Crew Molding Clay

Macklemore

Much like the man himself, Macklemore's hair is clean cut with a twist. He makes a bold impression with his hairdo by using a hard gel to keep a strong hold with plenty of shine. Distribute the gel from root to tip and then start to form the shape by pushing the hair back. Maintain the sides and back with a close buzzcut.

A NEW TURN

If the Modern Rotisserie feels like an upgraded, from-scratch version of Boston Market, it's no coincidence. Chef/co-owner Marjorie Druker, well known for her "triple-strength" chicken stock and fruity gazpachos at the New England Soup Factory, developed recipes for the original Boston Chicken more than 25 years ago. Druker's knack for rotisserie cooking resurfaced recently when she started preparing chicken dinners for family and friends who could no longer cook for themselves. In December, she made a business of it, launching the Modern Rotisserie, a new addition to the Newton Highlands location of her soup shop. Stop by for high-quality spit-roasted birds, hot and cold sides—from grits and creamed spinach to farro salad and spicy Haitian pickles—and French dip sandwiches on Saturdays.

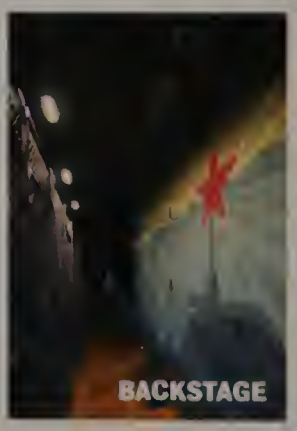
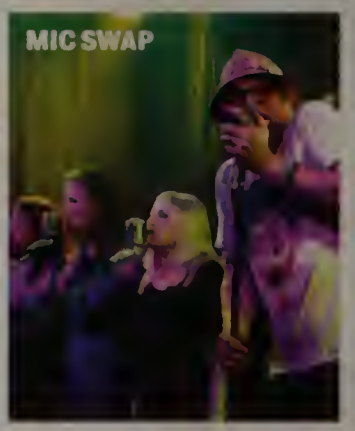
Rising Star





EVERYONE KNOWS KENDALL SQUARE IS A hotbed for high-tech firms; fewer realize the 'hood is home to a cutting-edge music venue. Opened last year, Redstar Union's state-of-the-art space boasts dreamy acoustic tuning, multi-track audio and multi-camera video capacity, and an LED curtain for phantasmagoric visuals. But the most interesting feature is its split personality: It's a live room and a recording studio, an intimate venue—with standing room for just 100—that aims for global reach, streaming HD media live and on-demand to online audiences.

That's what happened at last month's Amanda Palmer salon, where the punk-cabaret chanteuse was joined by several guest musicians and writers—as well as a social-media moderator. "This was kind of rethinking that traditional role of a band leader in the late-night show, having him be an actor between Amanda and the Twitterverse," says Redstar director of marketing Mike Young. "It was incredible to see people in London saying, 'It's 5 am and I have to go to work, but I can't take my eyes off this.' They were requesting songs, asking questions, giving commentary, responding to call and answer."

That sense of community and connection is key to Redstar's shows. "We have MIT robotics engineers mingling with Gypsy-jazz musicians," Young says. "We want this to be a place where those relationships happen and ideas are born and weird stuff comes out of it." Hence cross-pollinating programming like June's Mic Swap, where the frontmen of local acts OldJack and Mellow Bravo swapped bands for the night, or February's Jazz on the Rocks, where three alt-rock heavies—the Breeders' Tanya Donelly, Buffalo Tom's Bill Janovitz, and Will Dailey of Will Dailey and the Rivals—shared takes on jazz standards. Says Young with a laugh, "You had the alternative crowd mingling with the jazz crowd—doesn't happen all that often."

GENERATION GAP

A professor's romance with his student is the heart of this poetic novel.

ALTHOUGH THE ROMANCE here is May-December, the long relationship between Terry, an aspiring photographer, and Pulitzer Prize-winning poet Rhinehart has a kind of fluid coziness. When they reconnect 15 years after their student-professor affair, his writing has curled up like a hedgehog, while Terry's photography continues to develop in conceptual subjects like birds flying surreally over Rhinehart's bed.

Laura, Rhinehart's almost-ex-wife, is an art dealer who takes on Terry's photography, teetering with mixed motives and blending genuine helpfulness with hostility. Meanwhile, Rhinehart goes to the Ukraine to meet relatives he left behind when he came to the U.S. as a child. The unsettling trip has a brooding-atmospheric graininess that the author portrays as remarkably different from his New York existence.

The Rest of Us
By Jessica Lott

Lott studied creative writing at Boston University.

Terry continues to live her own "aging" single life while plunging into the art world. But it's in the ongoing soulful protectiveness of Rhinehart toward Terry that the book finds its heart. Not the didactic professor, rather he's a man who looks at Terry and her artistic aspirations, and at life, through his saddened, still-poetic eyes. Their relationship bumps and mellows until a confluence of life-changing events poignantly enacts the stark reality of their generational difference. ×××

I missed Rhinehart. I missed hearing him say my name, I missed the night we'd sat in this kitchen together. I missed the way he used to cup the soles of my feet in his palms when I was about to get up off the couch and said, "These pigs don't want to go to market."

ELEPHANT WITH A ROOM

PACK YOUR TRUNK Tranquil elegance at the Inn at the White Elephant Village.

SOME ISLAND HOLIDAYS CAN be tailored. Iceland, for instance, is a fun vacation spot for gourmands, ornithologists and Viking re-enactors alike. Maui's got a famous astronomical research facility along with the snorkeling. Prince Edward Island boasts both the Russet Burbank and the Yukon Gold potato. But other islands are less varied. As you wouldn't go to Ibiza if you disapproved of thongs, you don't go to Nantucket if you've got an aversion to preppies. If preppiness is embraced, however, there's no better place to flaunt your whale pants.

Much has been written in the pages of this magazine about the diversions of Nantucket's town center—its cobblestones and art galleries, its well-groomed couples walking even better groomed Labrador retrievers, its $4 pizza slices. There are wine festivals and Christmas Strolls and Figawis. But an ideal day on Nantucket involves a very specific pleasure: sipping a glass of port on the back porch of the Inn at the White Elephant Village while waiting for your shuttle bus to dinner at Topper's.

TRAVELER'S CHECKS

Don't attempt to cycle in the streets around the harbor. Cobblestones are hell on your tires, to say nothing of your bone structure when you fall off.

At Topper's, try the roasted veal sweetbreads with frogs' legs, if available. Just do.

There's also much to recommend the oyster chowder with leeks and sea urchin, garnished with caviar.

Standing in front of the weathered shingles of the Inn at the White Elephant Village, the careless visitor might assume the 20-unit building dates from the era of baleen corsets. It dates, in fact, from the era of YOLO hashtags. As a sort of bridge between the White Elephant Hotel and its more palatial residences, the Inn tempers its traditional exterior by offering Vegas-style cabanas by the pool.

Excess, of course, isn't the same as luxury. The Inn's lobby, for instance, is the antithesis of Trumpdom. Looking as if it were designed by a mermaid with a taste for ecru, it's a tranquil space of wainscoting and whitewash, textured with soft upholstery and brittle shells. It's also where you can snag a homemade cookie or a nibble of cheese before appraising the stuffed elephants in the gift shop.

This sense of muted swank carries into the guestrooms, which are determinedly beige. True, you'll see scallop shell whites and the odd glimmer of seafoam, but the opulent velvets, woolens, leathers and linens blend into a plush neutrality. Rain showers, deep tubs and recurring flat-screen televisions further pad out the understated comfort.

SHELL GAME The Inn's lobby has an aquatic feel.

In front of the Inn, an outdoor heated pool laps behind a tall, wooden fence, its white cabanas standing in military trim by the deck chairs. But Nantucket is an island for a reason. Next to the hydrangeas, a rack of bicycles offers an easy means to escape the town and explore the beaches. Take the Easton Street exit from the property, turning left past the Nantucket Hotel & Resort and heading up the pretty, tree-lined Cliff Road. After a few blocks, the vistas open up on a designated bicycle path that leads west to the ponds and summer rentals of the north shore. Sheltered, family-friendly Dionis Beach is only three miles out of town, and the Inn will pack you water and towels for the outing.

But a perfect island day demands crustaceans, and the finest butter-poached lobster available to man is at Topper's, the fine-dining jewel in that statement piece of Nantucket hotels, the Wauwinet (hop on the shuttle from the driveway of the White Elephant Hotel). The staging of the flowers, service and sunsets give the restaurant a feel of event—the crystal here has seen many an anniversary toast. This year the kitchen celebrates its own 25th year, and to mark the occasion, cellar master Craig Hanna uncorked the Woody 25, Topper's first proprietary whisky. Aged and bottled by Nantucket's own Triple Eight distillery (best known in Boston for their brewing arm, Cisco, which makes the admirable Whale's Tale Pale Ale), it's a Scotch-style single malt with a complex, fruity nose and a nuanced sweetness evocative of balanced, somewhat delicate whiskies like Glenmorangie or Balvenie. Don't be put off by the name, for while there's a hint of oak at the finish, it's mellowed to a whisper. You can order the Woody in a sour or Rob Roy, but be sure to taste it neat, alongside a plate of fresh oysters.

It's not often that anyone in Massachusetts spends a quarter century making a drink. But that's a large part of Nantucket's appeal: where tradition meets 21st-century standards, and the turndown service reveals Pratesi sheets. ✖✖✖

MITTEL GROUND

Tim Wiechmann plugs a huge hole in Boston's dining scene.

Bronwyn
255 Washington St., Somerville
(617-776-9900)
bronwynrestaurant.com

WUNDERBAR BITES Dishes like the giant haxe and the blutnudeln put an artful spin on hearty tavern fare.

WHILE BOSTON IS blessed with quality restaurants representing traditional cuisines from all over the world, we're still not quite a United Nations of food. Among the holes in our coverage of global foodways are the cuisines of Central Europe: Germany, Austria, Hungary, Slovakia, the Czech Republic, Poland. That drought ends with the arrival of Bronwyn in Somerville's Union Square, from Tim Wiechmann, chef/owner of Huron Village's well-regarded T.W. Food.

You may be fluent in menu French and Italian, but those won't help here: Bronwyn boasts more umlauts than a nü-metal festival bill. Do you know kartoffelkäse, rösti, knödel? Never mind the guttural consonant clusters—there's plenty that's familiar. On many tables you'll spot the giant haus bretzel ($8), a salt-flecked mahogany-toned beauty that registers as crustier and drier than its squishy ballpark cousin, punched up by a ferocious, sinus-clearing roasted-apple mustard. It demands the companionship of a tall beer, like a draft pint of Kulmbacher ($9), a clean, refreshing German pilsner. The bar's unique focus on German and German-style beers should be catnip to Somerville's beer-geek crowd. Forty options, among them nine drafts, include nine lagers ($6-$14), nine pilsners [illegible] and nine hefeweissen and wheatbiers [illegible]. There's a lot of specialized glassware, from barrel-shaped steins to boot-shaped stiefels.

An unexpectedly fine craft-cocktail program features seven originals like the Zwei ($9), a pretty, herbally complex concoction of genever, sweet vermouth, gentian liqueur and the singular caraway accent of kümmel. Wines draw heavily from the region, with five each of sparklers, whites and reds by the glass ($9-$14) or bottle ($36-$56)—attractive prices for underrated, food-friendly wines. Another 16 reserve bottles run from $54 to $112.

Next are torpedo- and disc-shaped wursts with terrific accompaniments like gorgeous house-made breads and wee microgreen salads. Individual wursts run from $6 to $8; the giant wurst platter ($25) features all seven. Standouts include a deep-flavored, finely textured, crimson-toned zungenblutwurst (blood, tongue and pork) and, in a nod to Poland, fresh (unsmoked) kielbasa, given a genteel luster by poaching in cream. An astonishing Hungarian-leaning venison pastrami ($14) coats thick slices of buttery-tender smoked venison in black pepper and flanks them with a gloss on gulyas, a puree of venison trimmings and cream. It includes another great house-made bread, a grilled oat-honey challah so eggy it recalls brioche French toast.

Nudeln (mid-sized noodle and dumpling plates) frequently swim in the butterfat-rich sauces of Alpine Italy. Potato/egg mohnnudeln ($21) are lightly pan-fried, tubular gnocchi in a crème fraîche sauce cut with brightly acidic cherry tomatoes and a dusting of citrus zest. Blutnudeln ($19) stains rye/wheat noodles magenta with pig's blood, their faint metallic tang dancing intricately with the flavors of slab bacon, onions, scallions and oranges. The health-conscious may opt for a pristine roasted-nectarine salad ($9), an elegant pureed borscht ($9) piquantly accented with strawberries and honey, or the vegan bio-markt teller ($17), a fine platter of vegetables, grains, breads and hazelnut butter.

Hefty mains include the vinegary brisket stew that is beef sauerbraten ($24) and Austria's famed jägerschnitzel ($25): pounded, breaded, pan-fried veal bedecked with foraged mushrooms. Heads will turn at the giant haxe ($32), a two-pound behemoth of braised pork. The tavern standby often comes as an undisguised pork foreleg, gnarly and gristly. This chefly treatment produces a conical mountain of moist, fatty hock meat wrapped in crackly skin around twin flagpoles of shank bone, surrounded by sauerkraut, roasted apples and new potatoes. It's phenomenal in its slow-cooked simplicity, staggering in its eating-contest portion.

Desserts are short and not too sweet, like the modest Bavarian apfeltorta ($9), a shortbread-like cake with apples and prunes, delectably topped with dense, excellent whipped cream. Traditionalists might favor one of a dozen fiery after-dinner schnapps ($12-$32).

The raucous bar's 18-foot ceilings expose ancient rafters; rough woods are illuminated by Gothic cast-iron fixtures. A sheltered patio recalls a classic biergarten, though given the tight quarters, beer window box might be more apt. Against slate-blue walls, the dining room features plain wooden tables with ornate high-backed chairs. Servers have the friendly polish typical of better Camberville restaurants and are well-versed in the novice-challenging menu, though they often have to compete with a hard-surfaced din.

While it takes some liberties with tradition, Bronwyn captures a lot of the soul of Mitteleuropean cuisine, navigating a channel between the kneipe's bluff heartiness and the chef-driven restaurant's refinement. Expect early crowds to turn into mobs as colder temperatures amplify the gut-busting charms of simple yet artfully crafted breads, sausages, noodles, meat and beer. ×××

MUST DO

The coming-of-age sexual tale wins with its racy comedy.

The To Do List ★★½

Starring Aubrey Plaza, Johnny Simmons, Bill Hader, Alia Shawkat, Sarah Steele, Scott Porter, Clark Gregg and Connie Britton. Written and directed by Maggie Carey. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

A FEW WEEKS BACK I WAS house-sitting for my mother and, during a bout of insomniac channel surfing, stumbled upon American Pie running in a graveyard slot on a high-numbered cable station. The movie that had been such a scandal in the summer of 1999 feels positively quaint now. What's more dated than a group of high school seniors trying desperately to lose their virginity? Youth culture has become so heavily sexualized at such increasingly young ages, even the late-to-the-party New York Times ran a trend story earlier this month that basically wasted a few thousand words on the shocking discovery that kids on college campuses have an awful lot of sex. Stop the presses!

Besides convincing me that I was born 10 years too early, this generational shift may account for why The To Do List is a period-piece set in the Jurassic era of 1993 (also known as the year I graduated high school). Written and directed by comedian Maggie Carey, it's a semi-autobiographical coming-of-age story about teenage overachiever Brandy Klark. Played by Aubrey Plaza, Klark's a classroom know-it-all goody-two-shoes, the kind of valedictorian who gets heckled during her graduation ceremony speech.

Klark is a self-proclaimed authority on everything, save for one subject in which she was never particularly interested. But the sight of studly dim-bulb college dude Rusty Waters (Friday Night Lights' Scott Porter) sets something stirring below the belt. So with characteristic diligence, Klark decides to handle human sexuality the same way she aced AP chemistry. She makes a to-do list (hence the title) of every naughty activity she has yet to try, and sets about clinically crossing off items with a comical collection of shocked and awkward teenage boys. Meanwhile her old study buddy Cameron (Johnny Simmons) whimpers lovelorn from the friend-zone sidelines.

The To Do List is nothing if not brutally frank about just how awkward and unsatisfying early sexual experiences can be, especially when divorced from affection. There are many laughs mined from Klark's all-business efficiency in treating erotic encounters like homework assignments, and the dumbstruck faces of horndog dudes who can't believe their luck. She learns the hard way why so many of these things are known by slang terms that end with the word "job." They're work.

Speaking of work, Klark's also lifeguarding for the summer at the local public pool, striking up an odd friendship with her burnout boss (Bill Hader), who is zonked most of the time and secretly can't even swim. Hader, who in real life is married to writer-director Carey, has a real knack for layering larger-than-life characters with sad undercurrents. He regards Klark and her quest with a protective affection, even while he's been hung up since high school on her slatternly older sister (Rachel Bilson).

Carey's screenplay has a clunky, episodic feel, which is perhaps inevitable given that it's structured around a list. Shot on a shoestring, the movie is nonetheless blessed with a bevy of famous faces presumably doing favors for the popular husband-and-wife team. Andy Samberg turns up as the kind of musician all too common in those dark days when people still listened to Counting Crows, while Klark's conquests are the likes of Donald Glover and McLovin himself, Christopher Mintz-Plasse. (It's been six years since Superbad, and he's somehow still convincingly playing high school kids.) Klark's scene-stealing parents are the wonderful Connie Britton and Clark Gregg. She's practical and supportive about her daughter's inevitable exploration, while he's hilariously appalled by any mention of the subject, rocked by the shattering revelation that he wasn't his wife's first.

Aubrey Plaza has perfected the art of dead-pan disdain on NBC's Parks and Recreation, but a few recent roles hinted she might be permanently typecast for tongue-clucking. It's nice to see her trying on some different colors here, excelling at the uptight Type-A personality that used to be Reese Witherspoon's turf.

Carey goes a bit too often for the easy gross-out, with a variation on Caddyshack's candy bar that falls deathly flat. There are more bodily fluids on display here than we're used to seeing in mainstream comedies, or really anywhere outside of porn. But despite the sometimes childish sight gags, what salvages the movie is the refreshingly adult attitude toward the messy matter of sexuality. No matter how much Klark tries to isolate herself emotionally, complicated and contradictory feelings creep in. Regrets are par for the course, but that's all part of growing up, and in the end it's really not that big of a deal. Or at least not as big of a deal as it might have seemed back in 1993. ×××

SONIC FIREWORKS

Texas instrumentalist band rides an unusual wave of success.

Explosions in the Sky plays the Nines Festival on Aug. 10.

WHEN DARKNESS FALLS at the inaugural Nines Festival on Aug. 10, people will witness Explosions in the Sky. But rather than rocket blasts over Devens—the Route 2 town known for its now-defunct U.S. Army base—festival-goers will experience the combustive soundscapes of a Texas band named after fireworks.

Drummer Chris Hrasky coined his post-rock outfit's Explosions in the Sky moniker on the Fourth of July in 1999 after one of their first shows. "It's a very singular image and made sense," he says. Yet 14 years later, plenty of music fans have yet to discover the evocative instrumental band that headlines the Nines, above Dr. Dog and Delta Spirit, before opening a fall tour for Nine Inch Nails.

"Someone said at one point that we're the biggest band that nobody's ever heard of," Hrasky, 38, says. "Our last record was very close to being in the Billboard Top 10 in its first week, and all our records have sold more than 100,000 copies. That's the weird thing. We're somehow in this middle ground."

That last record was 2011's Take Care, Take Care, Take Care, where Explosions in the Sky continued to develop shimmering, dynamic layers that swell from soothing to crushing in the hands of guitarists Mark Smith and Munaf Rayani and bassist Michael James. "We all really responded to music that was very beautiful and emotional but also could turn on a dime and be this massive rock onslaught," Hrasky says of their sound, which reflects such influences as Sonic Youth, Dinosaur Jr. and particularly the Scottish instrumental band Mogwai. "If Mogwai didn't exist, I don't think we would exist in the form we do now."

The drummer says he doesn't think that being an instrumental band (apart from some wordless vocals) presents limitations. "The fact that we don't have a singer and it's gone as well as it has, even though we've been doing it so long, feels like some kind of trick that we've been able to pull off," Hrasky says. "If we started out with a singer, I don't know if we would have made something as unique."

One opportunity that's grown over the past several years is soundtrack work for television and film. On Aug. 6, the group releases their soundtrack for Prince Avalanche, a movie starring Paul Rudd that depicts the desolate aftermath of Texas brushfires. "It's a pretty, pastoral-sounding thing with some Moog-driven Krautrock," Hrasky says of the collaboration with composer David Wingo, which includes acoustic guitars and keyboards—a haunting, more minimalist palette for Explosions in the Sky.

The soundtrack boon began in 2004 when the group was contacted to score music for the Friday Night Lights movie and TV show. "A lot of people heard the music, and the show got bigger, and records started selling more," he says. "That was when [the band] first made sense to our parents, that we were actually doing a real thing."

When composing, the members of Explosions in the Sky work by trial and error. "One of us comes up with a kernel of an idea, and we start building," Hrasky says. "Nothing gets through unless all four of us like it."

They also prefer guitars and drum kit at the core. "We don't want to have a string section or orchestra," he says. "That stuff can be pretty awesome at times, but we very much like the idea where we do everything ourselves, so if there are new sounds and instruments, it's stuff that we're figuring out on our own." Hrasky says the group's recent digital forays have included using "crazy samples of cars driving by, and then running it through a bunch of computer programs and filters. Hopefully we can fashion something from that."

They'll be enlisting a fifth musician to handle bass guitar and samples onstage for both the Nines Festival and the tour with Nine Inch Nails, whose leader Trent Reznor presumably likes Explosions in the Sky. "He obviously has a very specific vision," Hrasky says. "He's this guy who built his own thing."

Sounds like they have something in common. ×××

FRANCHISE ON DEFENSE

Patriot Way now has a detour sign.

THE NEW ENGLAND Patriots are all about winning. That's the culture created by Patriots owner Robert Kraft and perfected by coach Bill Belichick. "Avoiding the noise" has been a key component of their strategy. When a move is unpopular, we hear Belichick mumble the same dismissive refrain, droning with his head down: "We do what's in the best interest of the team." Three Super Bowl rings in the pocket and an unprecedented run in the salary-cap era, with the team proving a top contender every year, allows for a certain amount of arrogance. That's the Bill Belichick way, and that's the Patriot Way.

But what's now getting in the way, making it harder to win their first Super Bowl in nine seasons, is that dreaded 11-letter word—distraction. When the Patriots are at their best, that word isn't even in the lexicon in Foxboro. In the perfect Patriots world, it's football and only football. Even when the Summer of Gronk took off last year, the Patriots merely shrugged their shoulders and continued working on improving the team. Gronk was acting like a kid, something we don't see often from Patriots players, and everybody said, "It's Gronk being Gronk." But the tragic story now hanging over this franchise is very different.

The NFL has had its share of bad boys, including murderers (Rae Carruth) and gun-toters (too many to mention). But NFL commissioner Roger Goodell has tried to keep a tight leash on players who take part in an often-violent game that has too many athletes with high motors and short fuses. Then came the investigation of Odin Lloyd's murder and the arrest of Aaron Hernandez, cut from the Patriots shortly before he set foot in his new 7-by-10-foot home in jail. It's an American tragedy: The kid who grew up in "the hood," but couldn't leave the hood behind, is now sitting in a cell smaller than the walk-in closet of his palatial North Attleboro home.

The talented tight end, who reportedly had some drug issues while at the University of Florida, had first-round abilities but slipped all the way to the fourth round because of his off-the-field drama. A failed marijuana test cost him some serious cash coming out of college, but Hernandez appeared, from afar, to have been on the straight and narrow since arriving in Foxboro. Or so we thought. Kraft said he and the entire organization had been "duped" by Hernandez, who wrote a well-thought-out letter to the Patriots before the 2010 NFL Draft, avowing his focus on achieving his goals and offering to take biweekly drug tests throughout his rookie season—and donate any guaranteed portion of his compensation to the team's charity of choice if he failed.

Trust me: Coming out of college, Hernandez was fully vetted by all teams who had any interest in taking a flyer on him—and there were some teams who said under no circumstance would they ever sign this guy. But the Patriots believed in Hernandez, and a lot of that probably had to do with the close relationship Belichick had with Hernandez's college coach, Urban Meyer.

But for me the question is this: Wouldn't it have been prudent to vet Hernandez again last August before signing him up to a long-term $40 million deal? Isn't that when you'd do the real investigating? He wasn't a fourth-round pick anymore; he was an All-Pro talent ready to hit the jackpot. How about making sure this guy is fit, off the field? Bob Kraft has turned this franchise into a billion-dollar operation. He is one of the smartest businessmen on the planet, and he has a coach who is at least among the top five coaches in history. How could the Patriots throw $40 million at a potential walking time bomb? It's shocking that a guy who used to be inside the Patriots locker room is being investigated for not just one murder, but closer to a handful.

The "noise" surrounding the Patriots has been deafening, so loud that even the unflappable No. 12 has to be looking at himself in the mirror and wondering why we were so intrigued by the talents of Aaron Hernandez but failed to see who he really was as a person. The Patriot Way has lost its way. Winning, unfortunately, can no longer be the only thing. ×××

GOOD FENCES

Hostilities erupt with a bad neighbor.

NEIGHBORS ARE TRICKY. Hopefully you have good ones, because an adversarial neighbor situation has a way of escalating into full-on war. I know one guy who had his whole driveway redesigned so that when he pulled in at night, his headlights would shine into his neighbor's living room. While I love the creativity and pettiness of that maneuver, I personally have a high threshold of neighbor tolerance, forged by living in close quarters in Beacon Hill, Bay Village and Southie. When you and your neighbors are separated by a brick wall, it pays to be diplomatic.

But even I can be pushed too far.

Let me tell you about the guy who lives on the other side of my backyard. He's an older gentleman with a white beard who owns a small collie. His house and mine are probably less than 100 feet away at their closest points. And right now, we're at neighbor war. The drainage gully at our property line might as well be the DMZ between North and South Korea. In case you're wondering, he's North Korea.

The issue is his dog. His yippy, yappy, constantly outdoors dog. We've asked him many times, when his dog is in its second or third hour of barking, to take the thing inside. And yet the unleashed collie roams the neighborhood, yipping and pooping and generally just annoying everyone. For my part, I fenced my yard, and if my dogs bark, I take them inside immediately. Because I am a considerate neighbor and not a giant b-hole.

One recent Saturday afternoon, things come to a head. Heather and I are trying to take a nap. We've had a few horrible nights of one kid or the other being up, and now that they're both napping we have a rare and glorious chance to catch up on sleep. We lie down, pull pillows over our heads and begin to drift off when... Yip! Yip! YipYipYip! The demon animal is somewhere in the woods outside, but his piercing bark passes straight through the walls, auguring into our skulls like poison darts. We wait for the owner to collect the dog, call him, somehow make this stop. Which, of course, doesn't happen. Heather is first to snap.

Wearing sweatpants and a T-shirt, she hops the fence and storms into his backyard to question why he's sitting on his deck while his dog, a half-block away, barks incessantly. Since fighting while wearing sweatpants is a little bit COPS for me, I pull on heavy pants and shoes in preparation for a jungle expedition to flush the creature from the woods. If the guy won't get his dog, I will.

I storm down into the bushes and spy the ant-brained collie barking at a squirrel, who is doubtlessly jamming his little squirrel paws in his ears and wishing he could run out in front of a car. The dog spots me and, perceiving my malice, scrams in the direction of home. I stalk it through the vegetation like the Predator, stomping through someone's backyard and eventually pursuing the thing to its own territory. At which point my neighbor rolls up in his car, because evidently he'd been driving around calling for his dog as if he didn't know where it was. Dude, it was 200 feet away. You didn't want to walk into the woods.

The ensuing exchange does not represent me at my finest. I call him a term that rhymes with "turducken glass bowl." He replies: "I don't want to say what you are!" I retort: "I will say what you are: a douchebag!" And oh, it feels good to say that.

He vows to chain his dog to a stake so it'll bark all day to annoy me (nice guy!). I tell him I'll call animal control. He says he'll call the cops because I'm on his property. I take three steps over to the drainage ditch and say, "Now I'm on my property! Screw you!" The two of us probably have a combined age of 100, and we're basically yelling "Na-na na-na boo-boo, stick your head in doo-doo."

The drainage gully at our property line might as well be the DMZ between North and South Korea. In case you're wondering, he's North Korea.

As I'm climbing back over the fence, he yells, "And one other thing—keep your wife off my lawn!" As enraged as I am, this causes me to laugh in his face, this image of Heather as a feral animal who escapes onto neighbors' lawns. Man, I'll see what I can do, but she's really got a mind of her own sometimes.

So, in this case, diplomacy failed. I'm afraid we'll probably not be singing carols this Christmas with our backyard abutter. But I will say this: Since that day, I haven't heard much barking. You can aspire to be a good neighbor, but sometimes you need to point the high beams into the living room. ✖✖✖

Soroff On ANDRIS NELSONS

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's new music director tells us about techno, Wagner and conducting in his dreams.

NEWLY APPOINTED MUSIC DIRECTOR OF THE BOSTON SYMPHONY Orchestra Andris Nelsons, 34, was born in Riga, Latvia, into a family of musicians. After beginning his career as a trumpeter in the Latvian National Opera Orchestra, he worked as music director of the Latvian National Opera and the principal conductor of the Nordwestdeutsche Philharmonie in Herford, Germany. Since 2008, he has held the title of music director of the City of Birmingham Symphony Orchestra in the U.K. His debut with the BSO was at Carnegie Hall in 2011, while his first appearance at Symphony Hall took place in January. Nelsons is married to the Latvian soprano Kristine Opolais. They have an 18-month-old daughter.

Jonathan Soroff: What was the first thing you did when you found out you'd been named the BSO's new music director?
Andris Nelsons: I was in Vienna, and we had a concert. My wife was singing, and we just had a glass of wine. But when it came out officially, I spent the day on the phone with colleagues, and we broke out the Champagne.

What did your colleagues have to say?
Everybody was saying how great the orchestra is, how great the concert hall is, how great Boston is. It fits me, because I'm European, and Boston is a very European city.

Any musicians you'd never want to work with again?
Not really. I think there are musicians with whom I don't have the same goals, because music is food for our soul. It's about emotionality, fantasy, creating atmosphere. The music always wants to tell us something. Music is about much more than notes, or playing loudly or more softly, and it's not often that musicians don't care about that.

Do you listen to contemporary music?
I like jazz. I like rock. But I don't know a lot about it. There are styles I don't particularly understand. When I was a kid I didn't really understand techno music. I know it's about dancing, but it just sounded like it came out of a computer, with this relentless boom, boom, boom, boom. I don't think this is very inspiring, even for dancing. It didn't talk to me. I understand rap music and think it's very interesting.

If you could have dinner with three composers, who would they be?
[Laughs] One would be with Wagner. I don't know how fun he would be, but I certainly know who would take the lead in conversation. Then I think maybe from the opposite end of the spectrum, Shostakovich. He wouldn't be a party guy, but the times in which he lived were so terrible, I think he'd have some very dramatic insights about life. And the third would be Puccini. I love his operas, and he's such a great dramaturgist of human emotions. Everybody cries at his operas, and I'd like to know how he does it.

What's the biggest difference between conducting an orchestral work and an opera?
Well, generally, there's no difference in my mind. When you conduct any music, you are using your spirit and your heart. But there are more technical challenges in the opera with the chorus, and the soloists and the offstage musicians, as well as the orchestra in the pit. So it's more complicated to organize the process. But musically, it's the same doing a Wagner opera or a Mahler symphony.

Are all conductors control freaks?
Figures like Toscanini or Mahler, when they were conducting, they were really dictators. But nowadays, I think it's a different time. You are taking the lead, but it's a more psychological profession now. It's more like accompanying the musicians. And you should accept their input. It's more teamwork and inspirational. You sort of try to be the soul of the piece. That said, I have many colleagues who like to control things. It's not a democracy.

Do you make funny faces on the podium?
I think so. Yes. When I've seen videos of me, or people YouTube me, they certainly seem to think so.

When you conduct, your movements are very flowing. Are you a good dancer?
No. [Laughs] People sometimes say I should be a good dancer, but I'm very bad. I don't dance at all. I hardly danced at my wedding. When I conduct, the movement is coming out of my soul, and I did martial arts for 10 years as a kid, so maybe that's where the movement and body language come from.

Have James Levine or Seiji Ozawa been in touch since your appointment?
I have sent a message to maestro Levine, saying how honored I am to be his successor. And I have tried to reach maestro Ozawa, but he's in Japan, so it's difficult. But a lot of people have contacted me, including Simon Rattle, Antonio Pappano, Mariss Jansons and others.

Is Tanglewood a big perk of the job?
Of course. It's an extremely exciting and special part of this orchestra. It's a great challenge. It's a combination of the joy of making music, and meeting people, and the artists are in a different environment.

How long do you think you'll stay in Boston?
Oh, I hope I can stay as long as the orchestra and the audiences will want me. My contract is for five years, and I'm looking forward to building up our family. I would never want to be a music director with an orchestra where they don't like my way of music-making, so I hope that everyone likes me.

If I could only buy one recording of yours, which would you recommend?
[Laughs] I would suggest you get somebody else to tell you, but from my perspective... I think the CDs I've done with the City of Birmingham Orchestra and the Concertgebouw and others are so very different.

What is your favorite opera?
Probably Tristan und Isolde. Or Parsifal. It changes moment to moment.

Do you hear music in your sleep?
Yes. Mostly things I'm doing at that moment. I'm very often conducting in my dreams. Sometimes I have the wrong score, or it's a panic situation. It's strange. But I hope I only ever experience it in my dreams. ***

PLUCKY STARS

Meet the hard-driving, all-female quintet that's putting Boston back on the bluegrass map.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Della Mae looks like a marketer's dream: a contemporary band composed of five women in their 20s. But the quintet forged its sound on Boston's fertile string-band scene, putting a fresh twist on traditional bluegrass in an era when banjos and fiddles have even cracked the pop mainstream.

"We owe this band's existence to the small-family nature of bluegrass itself," singer/guitarist Celia Woodsmith says. "There were no ads put out. There were no auditions. We're not the Spice Girls."

Founder Kimber Ludiker, a two-time National Fiddle Champion, rounded up bandmates from personal contacts, initially on a lark. "We had this fun idea to get a bunch of girls together that played this hard-driving, high-testosterone bluegrass," she says of a sound they dubbed "mangrass" and briefly pursued in power suits under the moniker Big Spike Hammer, the title of an old Osborne Brothers tune. However, Ludiker says she realized the greater potential for a working band that reflects its different members' backgrounds, and changed the name to Della Mae after a lyric in "Big Spike Hammer."

Four years later, Della Mae has sealed that chemistry on This World Oft Can Be, its luminous second album and first with Rounder Records, while storming the summer circuit from North Carolina's MerleFest to Boston's Summer Arts Weekend.

Before moving to Boston five years ago, Ludiker was looking for an inspiring place to live when she wasn't on the road playing Irish music, and she saw this city having a hot acoustic scene, fueled by programs at Berklee College of Music and New England Conservatory. The Washington state native consulted Berklee professor Darol Anger, a fiddler who launched his career with the David Grisman Quintet. Ludiker recalls Anger's encouragement: "He said, 'There are moments in cities where the scene is just exploding, and you need to be there for that.'"

Women have long played key roles in Boston's string-band community. Ludiker counts Crooked Still singer Aoife O'Donovan and fiddler Brittney Haas and Joy Kills Sorrow singer Emma Beaton among her past roommates. Haas and Beaton guested on Della Mae's self-released 2011 debut, I Built This Heart.

"We're all so interwoven," says Ludiker, also mentioning a recent Kentucky fest where Della Mae met up with local bluegrass outfits the Boston Boys and Rounder label-mates the Deadly Gentlemen. "There's a roots revival happening right now, and all these great young Boston bands are right at the forefront of that."

"THERE'S A ROOTS REVIVAL HAPPENING RIGHT NOW, AND ALL THESE GREAT YOUNG BOSTON BANDS ARE RIGHT AT THE FOREFRONT OF THAT."

Deadly Gentlemen banjo ace Greg Liszt, who helped revive the scene a decade ago with the now-on-hiatus Crooked Still, sees those deep interconnections. "Folk music is known for being an exceptionally participatory music, and that's true at all levels," says Liszt, whose new band includes David Grisman's son Sam on acoustic bass. "It's a vocabulary that everybody shares."

Acoustic musicians thrive in venues like Club Passim and the Lizard Lounge. Della Mae's Woodsmith also credits the Cantab's Tuesday bluegrass jams. "I know people who'd drive two hours to get there because it was a fun hang," she says. "The traditional songs, everyone knows them. Any combination of people can say, 'Let's play "Old Home Place," ' and I'd say 98 percent of people who pick could play that."

Much of the activity stems from the colleges, and Della Mae helped solidify its lineup with the Berklee-trained Courtney Hartman. "A lot of people I went to school with, I grew up with on the festival circuit from the time I was about 12," says Hartman, who handles guitar and banjo and became a songwriting partner for Woodsmith. When Della Mae's previous bassist, Amanda Kowalski, left after the group made I Built This Heart, Hartman suggested the Nashville-based Shelby Means. "I've known Shelby since about age 9," she says. "She was from Wyoming and I was from Colorado, and that's basically like being neighbors when you're out there in the music world. Her dad would back me up at fiddle contests."

The story was similar for mandolinist Jenni Lyn Gardner—a South Carolina native who toured with her family's band as a child—and fourth-generation musician Ludiker. "My grandfather plays fiddle and his dad played fiddle," she says. "Both of my parents are fiddle players, and they actually met at a fiddle contest when they were teenagers."

"WE'RE TRYING TO TELL A STORY AND BRING THE AUDIENCE INTO BEING THERE WITH US."

Woodsmith offered more of a wild card, coming from rock and blues roots with the Vermont-bred duo Avi & Celia, which migrated to Boston in 2007 and added a rhythm section in 2008 to perform as Hey Mama. She wasn't exposed to bluegrass until she attended that year's Grey Fox Bluegrass Festival and started listening to singer/songwriter Gillian Welch. "That opened up the world to me," Woodsmith says.

Beyond Della Mae's picking prowess and shared vocals, Woodsmith presents a transformative element as a lead singer who boasts distinctive tone and phrasing, raising the band's profile in folk, country and Americana circles. "I've not been trained vocally, and that rawness and expression is what I rely on," she says. "We're trying to tell a story and bring the audience into being there with us." Born in North Carolina, Woodsmith grew up with gospel at home and cites Patsy Cline and Bonnie Raitt among early influences. But she also loved the Doors, Jimi Hendrix and especially Janis Joplin. "What I took from her, and I've seen a lot of videos, is to try and convey emotion from your singing and your stage presence."

On This World Oft Can Be, Woodsmith's resonant voice glides from the spry bluegrass bounce of Della Mae's update on the traditional tune "Letter From Down the Road" to originals like the impassioned "Heaven's Gate" and the driving "Empire," a song about a ghost town in which slapped bass and brisk mandolin chords imply drum rhythms. The quintet also benefits from smoothly burnished, organic production by flatpicking veteran Bryan Sutton, whom Hartman has also known since her midteens.

When it came to finding a place to make the album, Ludiker provided the connection to the famed Cash Cabin Studio in Hendersonville, Tenn. Ludiker knew the wife of John Carter Cash, who runs the rural studio where his parents, Johnny and June Carter Cash, recorded in their later years. "I've known Laura my entire life," Ludiker says. "She grew up in Oregon and was a great fiddle player and knew my parents growing up."

Cash Cabin provided plenty of ambiance. "There's an incredible energy in that place," Hartman says. "The memorabilia itself was so inspiring. Listening to takes of our songs, one of the chairs you'd sit in was [Carter Family matriarch] 'Mother' Maybelle's rocking chair, and it had Johnny Cash's initials dug into it. I had Bob Dylan staring me right in the face, and the poster said, 'Love you Johnny and June.'"

Della Mae spent two weeks at Cash Cabin after two months of rehearsals in Boston, but the group was still feeling itself out with new member Means, having not played any shows with her. "We got to know each other and get the feel of songs," Woodsmith says, "and Bryan was instrumental in making that happen, parsing out what was the song, what was the vibe and what we were looking for."

When it came to an album closer, Woodsmith recalls, "He said, 'What this record needs is this song like looking at your life, a thinking-about-things-at-the-end-of-the-day kind of song,' and Courtney and Shelby were like, 'We have the song!'" It was the pensive "Some Roads Lead On" by Wyoming's Bill McKay. Hartman played a guitar Johnny Cash had given to his wife as a birthday gift. "We sat in the living room by the fireplace of the cabin," she says, "and recorded that song around one microphone in one take." Hub rock veteran Paul Q. Kolderie (Radiohead, Morphine, the Dresden Dolls) mixed the album.

Although Woodsmith doesn't like to emphasize Della Mae's character as a female band, it was hard to escape the fact when they toured last year as cultural ambassadors under the U.S. State Department's American Music Abroad program to Pakistan, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan. "They did pick us specifically to go into those areas because we were women," Woodsmith says. "I don't like to promote the fact that we're women. But in this case, when we went to Central Asia, I was extremely proud to be a band of women."

The tour included stops at orphanages. "We'd let the orphans play our instruments, and for a lot of them, it was the first time they'd ever really touched instruments, and to see their eyes light up was such a joy," she says. "We did a musical collaboration in each city we went to, with local artists, and most of the time we couldn't speak the language. We had interpreters, but that only goes so far. But we could sit and play for hours."

For later this year, Della Mae's been discussing a cross-country tour in collaboration the Deadly Gentlemen. It's potentially dubbed the "Ladies and Gents Tour."

"There's definitely a core audience that's interested in all string bands somewhat equally, and that's a subculture," says the Gentlemen's Liszt. "But it's easier and easier for bands to break out of that and find their niche in the broader mainstream marketplace." He recalls when Crooked Still played England's Cambridge Folk Festival several years ago, and one of the smaller stages hosted future megastars Mumford & Sons.

"You can ask if there's a glass ceiling," Ludiker says, "but you don't know what people are going to start embracing." In the case of Della Mae, people are embracing great music. ✖✖✖

10 LOCAL ACTS THAT ROCK

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

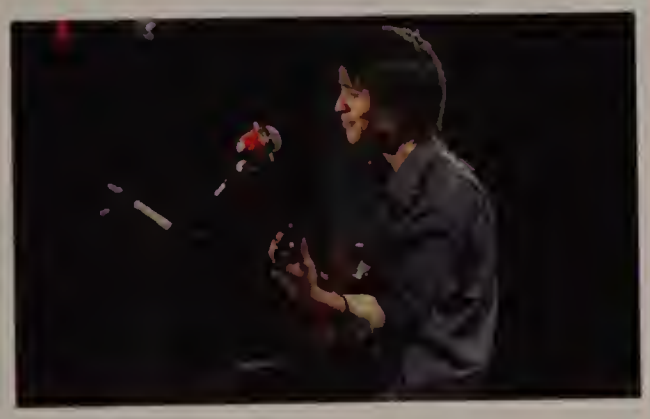
Overnight sensations are overrated—and rare on the Boston rock scene. It's even harder to sustain and build on an initial buzz, or to evolve as a band through membership shuffles and other bumps in the road. Many of these 10 acts have done just that to secure a spot among the city's best.

YOUNG LONDON

For a guy who cut his teeth on hardcore punk and metal, it's not unusual that Matt Rhoades made it to the stage on the Vans Warped Tour. It's just a surprise that he's done it with his frothy electro-pop duo Young London, revving up the tour's new Spotify Stage for electronic dance music this summer.



"You can't plan anything," the musician/producer says. "I organically changed my music taste and how I produce. It's interesting that I went more of a DJ route, but it still brought me back to this punk fest."

After years of playing in bands, Rhoades was producing a session in 2010 when he met Sarah Graziani, a fellow native of Salem, N.H., who calls herself "the little dork that started playing piano in third grade."

"I kinda freaked out about her voice when I heard it," Rhoades says. "It had this special rasp." He turned his focus to that partnership, balancing his technical energy with her emotional charms. Young London gained traction behind their self-titled 2012 Fugitive Recordings debut. But the duo seals its own personality on the Rhoades-produced new EP Instincts, which cracked the Billboard 200 with its thick, sugar-buzzing slabs of dance-party euphoria. "Broken" even shifts from dramatic ballad to club thumper. Live, the duo has grown into a potent vocal tag-team. "He's the one who's jumping off the stage, down in the crowd, touching people's hands, and I'll be holding down the fort," says the effervescent Graziani.

For shows like Warped Tour, Rhoades also filters his layers of beats, loops, guitar and piano ("120 tracks of instrumentation that I've kinda gone too crazy with") into parts for live guitar, drums and keyboards in their backing trio. "We have kids rocking out like it's a full band and some people dancing like it's a DJ," Rhoades says. "People respond to that live. They just don't know what to do half the time."

SHUN NG

Shun Ng embraced acoustic fingerpicking as a teenager after a friend challenged him to tackle Michael Jackson's "Billie Jean" on solo guitar, including the bass lines. "For subtlety and tone, it just somehow made sense," says the Singapore-bred Ng, who had first gravitated to playing electric blues guitar.

Last month, Ng earned an audience with Quincy Jones, producer of "Billie Jean" as well as other classic tracks for Jackson and other greats. A Singapore jazz pianist sent Jones the video for Ng's new "Get on With It," and the famed producer invited the guitarist/singer to his home for a chat and performance. Ng played originals rather than "Billie Jean" and reports that Jones was duly impressed and remains in the loop.

"It's like a fairy tale because I had just moved to America in hopes of pursuing my music," says Ng, who completed one semester as a student at Berklee College of Music. "Nobody has his sort of instinct toward music and what sounds good, and he breaks boundaries 'cause he was a jazz guy, but he also did pop stuff and hip-hop."

Ng says he likewise shuns categories and moved from his early love for Jackson and James Brown to guitarists Jimi Hendrix and Buddy Guy to classical composers Bach and Debussy. But dyslexia hampered formal schooling. "I was struggling," he says. "When I found music, I poured my entire soul into it. I felt like my soul had been kept in a dark, dark place. I couldn't understand why I couldn't comprehend the world."

Now his world's opening up, echoing the brisk snap of his virtuoso fingerplay (described in the name of his 2012 debut, Funky Thumb Stuff) on a custom guitar of Malaysian rainforest wood. He vows to further develop his singing and songwriting on his upcoming second album, though he's already shown insight in songs like empowerment anthem "Slam!" and "Angel," inspired by a friend's cancer-stricken mother.

"Sometimes you just listen to a song, and it makes you feel like a child again," Ng says. "When I play, I want to make people feel like they're listening to music, or listening to the guitar, for the first time."

EDDIE JAPAN

David Santos found it "validating" when his band Eddie Japan won this year's Rock 'n' Roll Rumble. "Our style is different from what might normally be heard in Boston," says the singer, who cites '60s-rooted influences like baroque-pop maverick Scott Walker and psychedelic rockers Love as well as mariachi music. In contrast to indie-rock, he says, "I wanted to make a bigger sound. A lot of Scott Walker's music, while it's not soundtrack music, has a huge orchestral element that appealed to me."

To cultivate that sound, Santos and keyboardist/trumpeter Chris Barrett drafted a virtual rock orchestra over the past six years. Drummer Chuck Ferreira and bassist Charles Membrino anchor the bottom, and when Barrett's Kingsley Flood foil George Hall left Eddie Japan in 2010, guitarist Bart LoPiccolo preserved the band's guitar tandem by calling on his brother's old Tribe bandmate Eric Brosius.

Brosius, audio director for music gaming company Harmonix, runs a home studio where Eddie Japan rehearses and recorded three tracks for their 2012 EP Modern Desperation, Part 1, including standout "A Town Called Nowhere," which Santos calls "a metaphor for a midlife crisis." The group temporarily widened their spaghetti-Western atmosphere with backing vocalists (including Brosius' wife, Terri, also of Tribe) and a string trio (with Kingsley Flood's Jenée Morgan) for their winning Rumble sets.

It's all a cinematic playground for Santos, whose widow's peak reminded high-school friends of Eddie Munster, inspiring half of the band's name, while Japan came from a David Bowie lyric. "I identify with crooners more than rock singers or belters," he says. "My influences have been people like Morrissey and Roy Orbison, kind of torchy and flamboyant and dramatic."

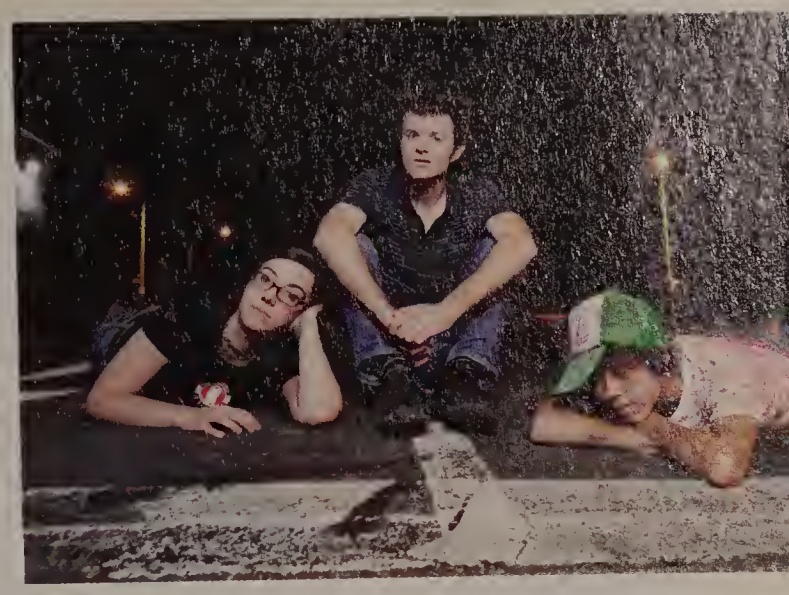
THE WANDAS



When the Wandas take the stage, each guitar note, rhythmic shift and harmony part sounds so polished, it's easy to overlook the music's edgy, adventurous details. "We follow our gut and whatever excites us as a band," singer/guitarist Keith McEachern says, and there's a striking difference between the rockers' just-released New Interface (A Design With Friends for the Future) and 2011's The Wandas.

"With that self-titled record, we put a lot of limitations on what we were going for," McEachern says. "We went for a very specific thing, which was an organic, natural, clean and crisp-sounding album." The results were spot on, if sounding perhaps a bit too much like Wilco. New Interface—recorded on Cape Cod without pre-production—subtly reflects a recent diet of surf rock in tracks like the playfully retro "Mad Man." The band's co-founding guitarist/songwriter Brent Battey also sings half the tunes, among them "Davy Jones' Locker," where Ross Lucivero's slinky bass evokes the '60s hit "Secret Agent Man."

"For this [album], we didn't tell anyone and went down there for two weeks, and built the whole studio," McEachern says. "It allowed us the freedom to experiment." Members were also in transition. Greg Settino took over on drums from Will Bierce, who eventually became a third guitarist and added to stage-front harmonies that can slip into XTC-like counterpoint. "When you add people or pull people out of the mix, it changes the sound," says McEachern, who began playing with Berklee classmate Battey a decade ago, though he counts 2008's New Wave Blues as the Wandas' first official release.

"We used to record every show and listen back and point out things," he says of the still-developing group's penchant for perfectionism in the past. "I want to be able to just enjoy the moment and not stress out or overanalyze it, because I tend to do that. It takes the fun out of it as a band."

MUY CANSADO

Some bands revolve around a frontman. Some have two personalities that complement each other to equally lead the charge. That's the case with Muy Cansado, where singer/guitarist Chris Mulvey and singer/bassist Lisa Libera practically interlock with contrasting stage styles. Mulvey strikes a rigid pose, keeping close to his pedals while he dishes out choppy, rhythmic guitar. Libera plays the free spirit, her body swaying to the pulse of her elastic bass as she answers Mulvey's vocals with arcing harmonies.

"We like things that complement each other naturally," says Libera, who acknowledges influences in the Pixies, Radiohead and especially Talking Heads. "I never complain with going in that direction," adds the David Byrne-ish Mulvey. "Stop Making Sense is a cornerstone of my life and my artistic personality."

Muy Cansado means "very tired" in Spanish, a phrase that runs counter to the band's perky, danceable rock, which hews closest to early Talking Heads since Muy Cansado's only a trio—with a Spinal Tap-ish track record for changing drummers. But the group found a prize in the Mexican-born Reyna Herrera, who received a master's in percussive performance from Boston Conservatory. She may have experience in the classical and avant-garde worlds, but she churns rock beats with subtle precision.

Herrera fits seamlessly on gems like "Predisposed" and "Giant" from 2013's Let It Go as well as new tunes. "I'm on a pretty big songwriting kick," says Mulvey, who recently took opera lessons and compares the band's new direction to Abbey Road-era Beatles. It's all hinged on Mulvey and Libera's offbeat vocal interplay. "At times we'll butt heads," he says. "She's always for the weird thing." Libera counters, "I'm very comfortable with dissonance. It's more exciting to my ears to hear something a little unexpected."

WHITE DYNOMITE

Tim Catz and his blustery brethren in White Dynomite have long lit their fuses on Boston's grunge-metal scene, including nearly two decades in Roadsaw for himself and drummer Craig Riggs.

But nothing has blown up like White Dynomite. When bassist Catz and Riggs teamed with guitarist John Darga and bushy-haired frontman Dave Unger (a bartender at Allston's Model Cafe) to hatch the bright idea of donning white suits and cranking anthems like "High When I Die," they sparked a sudden sensation.

"I hate to sound like we dumbed it down, but our other bands were so serious about stuff, and we wanted to write some straight-ahead fun songs," says Catz, who also joins Unger in rocking oversized, plastic-rimmed sunglasses onstage. "We didn't want to spend a lot of brain power on it."

Inspired by the Stooges (Unger and Riggs dress as Santa Clauses in tribute band the Scrooges every year) and Australian rockers such as Radio Birdman, Catz says he views White Dynomite as more of a punk-soul outfit, reflecting his and Unger's love for old R&B as well as punk and metal.

White Dynomite will follow their eponymous 2012 debut with Sweet Tooth, a fall EP that Catz jokes will offer a bit more depth and longer songs. On that front, the band's debut purposely aimed low, starting with goofily provocative cover art of a woman's hand igniting TNT that sticks out of a man's pants.

A cartoonish explosion of a different sort took place when Catz brought a pillow to T.T. the Bear's Place for White Dynomite's triumphant April set in the Rock 'n' Roll Rumble preliminaries. "We didn't know how many feathers are in those things," he says with a chuckle. "We were sloppy and drunk, and this pillow came out and took it to the next level. People just lost their fing minds. They'd been throwing beer at us all night, and when the feathers came out, it was like we were tarred and feathered!"

EKSI EKSO

Tom Korkidis wanted to make a more upbeat pop album, maybe even a dance record, since he'd been listening to '90s R&B like Janet and Michael Jackson. Sparse grooves also made sense for his onetime sextet Eksi Ekso's second outing as an art-pop trio, particularly after employing a chamber orchestra for 2011's Brown Shark, Red Lion. He ended up making an album about one of America's first serial killers.

"I'm really into narratives and cinema," says Korkidis, who seized the concept after reading a book about 19th-century enigma Dr. H.H. Holmes. "I thought, 'What a ridiculously crazy, ambitious character.' He was an alchemist, involved in insurance fraud; he had children, he had multiple wives, he bedded heiresses."

Despite lyrics like "Ready in rows, with no hint of the slaughter," which Korkidis sings in his detached baritone in "Glass Damsels," listeners might not even notice Archfiend revolves around the dual storylines of a murderer and his victims. The music still spins danceable grooves with synthesized bass and stark beats that split ground between Depeche Mode and Twin Shadow. Live, Korkidis alternates on guitar, bass and baritone sax, and, further confusing club crowds, Sean Will handles the keyboards, trumpet and sampler, while Jacob Cole takes over the percussion and loops that Alex Mihm manned on record.

"I grew up loving everything from Phil Collins to Middle Eastern music," says the Greek-born Korkidis, who played jazz with Will at UMass Lowell. "A lot of music I'm drawn to has multiple layers," he says. "Maybe our next record will be less confounding lyrically, and we'll pull back some of the density."

DUB APOCALYPSE

Somerville's Union Square can seem dead on a Sunday, but the atmosphere changes when you enter Bull McCabe's. The bar's packed with bodies nodding to the airtight breakbeats of Tommy Benedetti from roots-reggae futurists John Brown's Body. Guitarists Johnny Trama (Ghosts of Jupiter) and Jeffrey Lockhart inject biting licks. Bass grooves ooze from funk veteran Aaron Bellamy, who's stepped up since Benedetti's JBB mate Nate Edgar moved to Brooklyn. Guitarist Van Martin slides in for a Jerry Garcia-toned rock lead. And singer Boubacar Diabate pops in for a tune. There are also horn lines from rotating players that can include Timo Shanko (Fully Celebrated Orchestra/G. Love & Special Sauce) or Dana Colley (Morphine).

Welcome to Dub Apocalypse, which Benedetti and Edgar began at Matt Murphy's in Brookline before securing their base at McCabe's two years ago. "With a residency, if you're playing every week, the ideal thing is to keep it as fresh as possible," Benedetti says. "So that's why we started incorporating players from different bands and genres.... You keep people coming back because each show's a little different."

The drummer anchors the band's core group of players, calling shots from a master list of original tunes as well as Studio One grooves from Jamaica. "They're timeless rhythms and melodies and horn lines, and we're using that as a platform to launch our own inspiration," Benedetti says of his improvisation-savvy crew, which shares similarities and occasional membership with the world/jazz/groove collective Club d'Elf. "To play in this band, you've got to have elephant ears. That's when it really happens."

Dub Apocalypse hasn't released any records ("It's a hard thing to capture in the studio," he says), but he endorses tapers who post shows online. "There's something in it for people who like soul, funk, reggae or jazz or Phish or whatever," he says. "The more people that can hear the music, the better for all."

THE NEW HIGHWAY HYMNAL

Boston nurtures a bustling niche for psychedelic garage-rock, boasting such notables as CreaturoS and Ghost Box Orchestra. But none stir up hellacious psych-drama quite like the New Highway Hymnal, a three-piece from Haverhill that kicks up a sonic squall to rival the chaotic swirl of their visual backdrops.

"We're trying to evoke a feeling when people listen to us," says singer/guitarist Hadden Stemp, drawing a comparison to how visual artists strive to evoke feelings from abstract pictures. "Sometimes it can be urgency, or it can be paranoia, or fear."

Such sense of dread erupts from his reverb-rung vocals and throttled guitar shards as Stemp cues the band's balance of cacophony and control. He often performs bare-chested, howling over the throb-and-crash undertow of bassist Amelia Gormley and drummer Travis Hagen. Formerly a quartet with guitarist Lukas Goudreault, who helped fuel the band's 2012 debut, Whispers, the New Highway Hymnal nods to influences such as the Fun House-era Stooges, the Doors, the 13th Floor Elevators, and the early Grateful Dead. "Not the 'Fire on the Mountain' Dead," Stemp says, "like them making feedback for 10 minutes."

That kind of freak-out peaks at the end of the band's sets, usually on "Hey Kid (Gotta Run)," as Stemp wrestles his guitar against his amp or onto the stage while Hagen sends his drum kit sprawling. "I'd like to say it takes a lot of talent to do it, but it's just me making noise," Stemp says. "It's always a release."

THE FIELD EFFECT

Defined as the art of making maps, Cartography makes a perfect title for the Field Effect's 2012 debut.

"We found a lot of common threads in the lyrics that tended to relate to distance and places and maps," singer/guitarist Doug Orey says. He even sings, "If not for this cartography, I could wake up at your feet" in "Dancing With Earthquakes," waxing nostalgic for a lady friend who moved to California.

Beyond romance, however, the Field Effect sprang from personal intersections of time and place. Maryland native Orey met Pittsburgh bassist Annie Hoffman at Berklee College of Music, but after their 2009 graduation, he headed to London and then to New York. He eventually ended up back in Boston, where Hoffman became an assistant engineer at Zippah Recording Studios. And with Gloucester-bred drummer Adam Hand and Connecticut guitarist Nick Grieco, they launched the Field Effect in 2011, sharing a mutual love for the emo-centric rock of Jimmy Eat World and the Promise Ring.

Speaking of dancing with earthquakes, there's no mistaking the Field Effect when the band loudly hits the stage, slamming unison chords and cymbals with gleeful momentum. "That's one of the things from when I first met Annie," Orey says. "She was just smiling the whole time, not a fake, forced smile but a 'This is the greatest thing that's happening in the world right now' smile. And that's true for all of us."

A similar punch permeates Cartography, though Orey says they're working on new songs that temper the pedal-to-the-metal dynamic. "Even when I do solo acoustic stuff," he says, "I sing just as hard."

PLAYING WITH PROVISIONS

FOOD THAT HITS THE perfect note? That's the idea behind Fork & Tune, the latest endeavor from Brighton bakery Treats on Washington. Owners Jessica Brown and Dana Briley present a music-inspired eight-course meal embodying the theme and feel of a particularly innovative album, which plays while guests eat around a communal table. The current Stevie Wonder–inspired menu, Songs in the Key of Life, features Pistachio Pavlova: a melange of fluffy chocolate, blackberries and basil. Eat your musical heart out Sunday evenings through September.

Rap-ture

Delivery Service

In Company One's mega-mixtape of a story, three suburban teens, Hank, Julian and Luann, struggle to find their rhythm during the emerging hip-hop scene of the late 1980s. Armed with a suitcase-sized boombox featuring a cassette deck and flashy aesthetics, the three friends, bored with poetry slams and rap battles, dream of producing their own beats. How We Got On explores city street music and cultural identities as a live emcee laces the suburbanites' stories with a historical and metaphysical account of the birth of a new music. Let the beat flow through you through Aug. 17 at the Boston Center for the Arts' Plaza Theatre.

The Facts of Love

If you're looking for a classic love story, Annie Hall might break your heart. Woody Allen's breakthrough 1977 film documents the roller coaster relationship of insecure New York City comedian Alvy Singer and his neurotic girlfriend Annie Hall. Their conversations on subjects like narcolepsy, the growth of the entomology field and the advantage of precoital toking are the definition of classic Woody Allen. But arguments, shrink visits and Singer's constant concern with death ultimately strain the two protagonists to a breaking point. Watch their nervous romance unravel on Aug. 5 at the Coolidge Corner Theatre.

20 Feet From Stardom ★★★★ You sing along with them on the radio all the time, but I bet you've never even heard of these ladies. Morgan Neville's jubilant, long-overdue documentary moves the spotlight from center stage to the unheralded backup singers who have anonymously contributed to our pop-culture consciousness for the past 50-odd years. Darlene Love, whose voice defined Phil Spector's Wall of Sound, was taken advantage of by Spector's shockingly petty (and seemingly criminal) attempts to deny her recognition. Watch out for Merry Clayton, who showed up in a bathrobe with rollers in her hair in the middle of the night to wail on "Gimme Shelter" when the Stones were stuck in a rut. (The shot of Mick Jagger listening to her isolated vocal track is alone worth the price of admission.) Their stories are sad, as showbiz tales often are. But this funny, raucous party of a movie is a celebration, not just of wonderful music but of finally giving credit where it's due. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and West Newton.)

Crystal Fairy ★★★ It is the summer of coked-up Michael Cera. The former whimpering man-child tops his outrageous cameo in This Is the End with another druggy subversion in this Sundance oddity from writer-director Sebastian Silva. Cera stars as an American visiting Chile, hell-bent on locating the legendary San Pedro cactus, which is supposed to have hallucinogenic properties. In the company of three eye-rolling locals (played by the filmmaker's brothers), Cera cluelessly and boorishly insults pretty much everybody unfortunate enough to make his acquaintance. It's one of the most super-heroically annoying performances I have ever seen. The prissy little brat meets his match in the title character, a hippy-dippy fellow American wanderer played by Gaby Hoffman. She's always guilelessly carrying on about spirit rocks and meditative chants, walking around naked and oblivious to her host's derision. The meandering movie eventually finds its way to the desert, where one stunner of a monologue by Hoffman sends this slight stoner comedy into deeper, more disturbing waters. (At Kendall Square.)

Fruitvale Station ★★★★ The shooting of unarmed 22-year-old Oscar Grant in the back by a Bay Area Rapid Transit police officer was a case that galvanized the public, with unnerving similarities to the recent George Zimmerman verdict. But this extraordinary debut film from writer-director Ryan Coogler leaves all that in the future, dialing back a day for a low-key, humanist portrait of the last 24 hours of Grant's life. It's a gentle film, with deep reservoirs of empathy and understanding. Fruitvale Station has a loose, hang-out vibe, following Grant around this Oakland community. Coogler is roughly the same age and from the Bay Area, which is probably why every detail in the picture feels so lived-in—and so right. Played in a brilliant, star-making turn by Michael B. Jordan, Grant's no angel, nor is he a martyr. It's a glimpse of one day in one life. Maybe it wasn't a remarkable life. But it was a life all the same, stupidly and tragically snuffed out. (At Kendall Square.)

The Great Gatsby ★★ Australian dynamo and short-attention-span enthusiast Baz Luhrmann never found anything he couldn't turn tacky. So after the Hawaiian-shirt-clad hash he made out of Romeo + Juliet and the pillaging of 30 years of pop culture via massacred song snippets in Moulin Rouge comes his bizarre take on The Great Gatsby. It's a long, chintzy 3-D muddle based on a book that's not particularly suited to movies, but Leonardo DiCaprio happens to be amazing. The 1920s Jazz Age is scored to Jay-Z. Every party in the Hamptons looks like a live MTV report from Spring Break, all bumping and grinding, and the anachronisms clang like a broken church bell. But DiCaprio works wonders in a movie that's otherwise distracted by small, shiny objects. He's hooked on affectations, a millionaire pretender to the throne who came from nothing and thus always seems to be sinking in quicksand when confronted with high society's betters. This is a great performance. Too bad everything else about the film is rather awful. (At West Newton.)

The Heat ★★ ½ Set the DeLorean for 1986, and you just might have a grand old time with The Heat, a lo-fi buddy-cop comedy that tweaks the time-honored formula ever so slightly by replacing Mel Gibson and Danny Glover with Melissa McCarthy and Sandra Bullock. For the first half-hour or so, I thought it was gearing up to be one of the worst movies I have ever seen, but eventually it grew on me. It's easy to forget what a gifted comedian Bullock can be, but she's a real treat here, clomping around, condescending to everybody. It's only through prolonged exposure to McCarthy's foul-mouthed, usually hammered detective that we begin to see cracks in the facade. Bullock puts up an anal-retentive front, but deep down she can't wait to start swearing and drinking at lunch. The Heat is a throwaway movie, putting a distaff spin on pictures that probably weren't all that great in the first place. But formulas become formulas for a reason: because they work. This will play forever on cable. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Lone Ranger ★★ ½ Released amid a perfect storm of production delays, budgetary nightmares and celebrity schadenfreude, Gore Verbinski's oddball Western is the kind of box-office disaster that becomes a punch line for late-night talk-show monologues. Too bad, because this is one fascinating film. The weirdest summer blockbuster to come down the pike in eons, The Lone Ranger is a bitterly cynical, Sergio Leone-styled bloodbath full of fairy-tale flourishes and slapstick interludes out of a silent comedy. We begin in 1933 in an Old West museum exhibit, where Johnny Depp's Tonto is a statue come to life. He spots a little kid dressed up as the title character and starts spinning a semi-coherent, fanciful yarn about what really went down between him and Kemo Sabe. This device positions the picture as an alternative myth, a tall tale corrective to "printing the legend." The Lone Ranger is way too violent and way too long, but also daringly subversive with some marvelous set pieces. I have no idea who this movie was made for, but I'm glad I saw it. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Man of Steel ★★★ Brows furrowed when Dark Knight guru Christopher Nolan and Sucker Punch director Zack Snyder announced they were rebooting the saga of America's favorite illegal immigrant. I don't think anyone needs to see Kal-El conflicted with Batman's trendy neurosis. The drab color scheme and handheld photography feel like concessions to a fashionable "gritty" aesthetic, but otherwise I'm relieved to report that this is the same old Superman. Played with a wonderful, forthright decency by newcomer Henry Cavill, the Man of Tomorrow begins the film as an anonymous drifter, trying to hide his superpowers in a succession of go-nowhere jobs and dodging pesky Daily Planet reporter Lois Lane (Amy Adams). It's only when a crew of Kryptonian supervillains come threatening Armageddon that he finally busts out the cape and takes flight. The fractured flashback chronology is sometimes awkward, but Man of Steel boasts some terrific performances, particularly by Superman's two dads—Russell Crowe and Kevin Costner. The apocalyptic smackdowns suffer from CGI overload, but the movie is big-hearted and sincere. Just like its hero. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Much Ado About Nothing ★ ½ This larky little Shakespeare adaptation, whipped up by Joss Whedon and his regular TV stock company during a 12-day break on The Avengers, is literally a home movie, filmed in Whedon's own house. Why not unwind from the stress of a massive blockbuster shoot by inviting all your old friends over to riff on the Bard's funniest play? Problem is that, even by home-movie standards, it's a terrible film, indifferently photographed on smeary, consumer-grade black-and-white digital video. Much Ado shovels mass quantities of iambic pentameter into the mouths of untrained third-string television actors, most of whom appear to have learned their lines phonetically. Not since Baz Luhrmann's Romeo + Juliet have I been so convinced that a cast had no idea what they were saying. These folks might as well be speaking Klingon. It's all buffoonish clowning around, sexy-time pantomimes and drunken dances. The barn door–sized performance by Alexis Denisof might be my new least favorite thing ever. I kept waiting for him to slip on a banana peel. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and West Newton.)

Plant-Based Diet

Cactus Club

In Crystal Fairy, Michael Cera stars as an American druggie in Chile.

Now You See Me ★★ ½ If you stop and think about anything that happens in this movie, you'll realize none of it makes a lick of sense, but you'll probably be too tickled to care. This sleeper hit stars Jesse Eisenberg, Woody Harrelson, Isla Fisher and Dave Franco as a quartet of Las Vegas magicians who punch up their act by robbing banks while they're onstage. Impossible, you say? Maybe. Professional magic debunker Morgan Freeman has a grand old time taunting exasperated FBI agent Mark Ruffalo with all the tricks of the trade, as the increasingly improbable smoke-and-mirrors act escalates to a rather enjoyable level of absurdity. Director Louis Leterrier keeps the camera swooping and the pace tight, understanding that a moment's contemplation will topple this whole thing like a house of cards. The game cast is well into the silly spirit, with kudos going to Eisenberg's patented nerd-bully routine and Harrelson's mischievous smirk. Ruffalo's fuming indignation suggests he should probably play the Jackie Gleason role when they inevitably remake Smokey and the Bandit. (In the suburbs.)

Pacific Rim ★★★ ½ The beguiling thing about Guillermo del Toro's Pacific Rim is just how well thought out it all is. Yes, we're talking about that movie in which skyscraper-sized robots fend off attacks from gigantic Godzilla monsters. It's a rock 'em-sock 'em display of mass distraction, but it has obviously been brooded over and mused upon for years by del Toro and his co-screenwriter, Travis Beacham. Pacific Rim exists in a complete, fully realized universe, which is a high compliment for a movie that also feels like it was dreamed up by an 8-year-old splashing around with toys in the bathtub. Dedicated to Ray Harryhausen and Ishiro Honda, it's madly in love with all those Creature Double Feature UHF-channel staples, ushering the man-in-lizard-suit kitsch into a new age of IMAX 3-D digital filmmaking technology. Del Toro has been missing from movies for five years, but he's back with a vengeance here, and his imagination clearly knows no bounds. There's a childlike glee to Pacific Rim. It's dumb fun done smart. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

This Is the End ★★ ½ One time there was this great party at James Franco's house that got ruined by the rapture. Or at least that's the idea of this wildly self-indulgent, occasionally hilarious shambles from writer/directors Seth Rogen and Evan Goldberg. A sprawling cast of Hollywood's most self-deprecating comics star as themselves, with Jay Baruchel visiting from Canada and not so secretly resenting childhood buddy Rogen's douchey new movie star pals. Playing comically exaggerated versions of their offscreen personas, Rogen's the affable pothead, Franco's a pompous pseudo-intellectual, and Jonah Hill oozes passive-aggressive smarm. And then the world ends. It's the same cheerfully vulgar bromance dynamic you'd expect from the writers of Superbad, with an added element of the apocalypse. The best jokes here revolve around just how pampered and useless actors are in a crisis, while looters and natural disasters are no match for the destructive power of Danny McBride. Too heavy on the improvisation and at least half an hour too long, This Is the End is also often quite terribly funny. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

World War Z ★★ ½ After all the troubled production rumors, delayed release dates and reshoots, producer/star Brad Pitt's $200 million zombie apocalypse movie finally arrives, and I guess it's all right. Throwing out most of the Max Brooks book from which the film takes its title, World War Z gives Pitt the Tom Cruise role as humanity's last hope after a killer virus turns everybody into frothing, herky-jerky monsters. As a retired United Nations investigator inexplicably called back to work to combat this crushing epidemic, Pitt furrows his brow and gives one of his blander leading-man performances. His job seemingly is to trot around the world witnessing wild, extravagantly elaborate scenes of devastation while being smarter and more handsome than everybody else. It's an eye-popping spectacle, and weirdly remote. Only in the film's third act (notoriously taken over by an entirely different creative team) does the movie really cook, trapping key characters in an enclosed location with clearly defined goals for one corker of a white-knuckle suspense sequence. Memo to Hollywood: Less is more. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

High Marks in Hip-Hop

Books to Beats

The journey of Homeboy Sandman is almost cinematic: An Ivy League graduate and law school attendee becomes an experimental hip-hop artist. Raised in Queens, N.Y., Sandman's city-that-never-sleeps outlook kept his musical passion at the forefront during stints as a teacher, writer and bartender. After signing with Stones Throw Records in 2011, Sandman released an EP and two full-length hip-hop records, with Kool Herc: Fertile Crescent debuting in May. Endless rhymes and wordplay flow over hypnotic beats as he gives his dissertation on the crude realities of rap culture and other topics. See your homeboy live on Aug. 4 at Church.

Are We There Yet?

Just Say Noe

On her road trip across the country, Zannah Noe saw America laid bare. Her new pop-up exhibit, American Bones, draws on her five-month journey, capturing the eclectic architecture, landscapes and characters she encountered, from amusement parks to bus stations, from Native American dancers to riders in a prison rodeo. Riffing on regional identities, her photographs and collage-like paintings play with ideas of Americana and highlight the working and creative classes from coast to coast. Take a trip with Noe at the Albright Art Gallery Aug. 2-4.

Finding Fromage

The Secret Life of Cheese

What better reason to visit a Castilian hilltop village than to taste some magical cheese? In the memoir The Telling Room: A Tale of Love, Betrayal, Revenge, and the World's Greatest Piece of Cheese, Michael Paterniti meets a Spanish cheesemaker who tells him about the world's most expensive cheese, complete with special powers, such as the ability to bring back long-lost memories. Paterniti moves his family to Guzmán, Spain, to discover the truth behind the intriguing dairy product, but it's not long before his plan develops a few holes. Amid his investigation, he gets entangled in a mystery involving betrayal, theft and death threats. "Say cheese" gets a whole new meaning on Aug. 5 at Brookline Booksmith.

Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip. Where did you take us? Send us a picture of you or a buddy, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you went. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed IMPROPER Sightings.

In Oahu, Hawaii, Kate Ferenczy took the lei of the land.

Bob Ryan had no idea where he was until he looked slightly downward and to the left.

Pamela Gechijian and Wendy Lo were excited to explore Taipei, Taiwan, but were surprised to find out that not everything is made there.

After taking this photo in Kars, Turkey, former U.S. Rep. Peter Torkildsen and state Rep. Steven Howitt decided it was time to motor.

RESTAURANTS

ABE & LOUIE'S [793 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-536-6300, abeandlouies.com] Abe & Louie's is the quintessential American steakhouse, serving prime cuts of corn fed, Midwestern beef, fresh seafood and garden produce. Steaks are aged on the bone for six weeks to ensure maximum flavor. Signature dishes include the bone-in filet mignon, NY sirloin and swordfish chop. With its high quality food, outstanding service and classic interiors, this award-winning restaurant has consistently remained a Boston favorite since its debut in 1998.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

DOUZO MODERN JAPANESE RESTAURANT & LOUNGE [131 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-859-8886.] Douzo is a Modern Japanese Restaurant and Lounge located in Boston's Back Bay/South End neighborhood. A beautiful and modern decor to complement a wide range of traditional and innovative menu items. Serving only the freshest and highest quality ingredients available for the best taste. Valet parking is available Wednesday through Saturday and validated parking for the adjoining parking garage after 5pm. Take-out and delivery offered daily as well with pre-packed sushi Monday through Sunday.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

JOE'S AMERICAN BAR & GRILL [9 locations in the Boston greater area, visit joesamerican.com] Joe's serves classic American comfort food in a comfortable setting, making it a local favorite for lunch, dinner, weekend brunch or take-out. Everything is made in-house, from the famous clam chowder to their juicy burgers or fall-off-the bone ribs. With carved wood, stained glass and vintage lighting, Joe's is reminiscent of your favorite New England watering hole. Try the bloody mary or one of their local beers on tap.

JOSE MCINTYRE'S [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Jose McIntyre's is located across from the Aquarium on Milk Street. This is Boston's only Mexican-Irish restaurant and bar. For close to two decades Jose's has been an institution with the after work and late night party crowds. If the Dos Equis man is the world's most interesting man, Jose McIntyre is the world's most entertaining. Come experience the most unique venue in Boston. With 5 rooms, 3 bars, 2 floors and a game room; José is the perfect place to unwind with co-workers or host a celebration.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $.Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

SAMBA STEAK & SUSHI HOUSE [1138 Worcester Rd. (Rt 9E) Framingham, MA 01702, 508-628-0288] Samba Steak and Sushi House is MetroWest's hidden gem and the perfect place to host your company holiday party. Our private function room seats 20 - 100 people and is ideal for either an intimate gathering or a festive fete. Samba will customize a package suited specifically for your tastes, including a variety of entertainment options. Call 508-628-0288 to discuss your holiday plans.

Boston's finest restaurants and clubs

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

BARS & CLUBS

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 DARTMOUTH STREET, BOSTON, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

SAVOR THE DAY

It Would Make for an Interesting Necklace

The new venue was noisier, but it's always a boisterous crowd when Community Servings hosts LifeSavor, which ushered in its 21st year with its mega-cocktail party at the Westin Boston Waterfront followed by dinners at restaurants all over town.

Front and center were honorees Barbara Jordan, Ron Ansin and Lois Silverman, co-chairs Joanne Jaxtimer, Christopher Mayer and Jerry Sargent, stalwart supporter Joan Parker (making her final yet super-glamorous bow in public before she passed away), the dashing Tony Corey and CJ Menard, the ultra-charming JJ Milligan and the criminally blue-eyed Rob Gravis, carpet-bagger Shawn McBride and the impish Daron Manoogian, the ever-effervescent Hat Sisters, interior design queen Eileen Patterson, mega-philanthropist Karen Bressler, fun-loving criminals Marshall Berenson and Kathy LaShay Berenson, the unfairly handsome Jonathan Scott, the über-lovable Corby Kummer, James Bond impersonator Leif Brierley and Bond girl Shannon Miller, graphic design avatar Rob Stone and his main squeeze, Nati Torres, the dapper George Hill and the equally dapper Stephen Hallahan, people person Nick Lorenzen and his rockin' brunette bride, Alyssa Hassan, and so on and so on and so on.

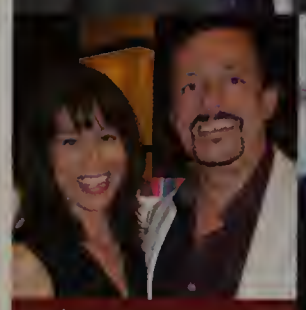
The not-wonderful acoustics provided an opportunity for one of the evening's funniest moments, when the incomparable Mrs. Parker stepped up to the microphone and demurely invited everyone to "shut the f up."

Needless to say, they did, and things went swimmingly thereafter, as everyone socialized like mad before it was time to head out for dinner.

The evening's cutest exchange:

A woman in the wholesale food business said, "Oh, I can get you Pearl's. Pearl hot dogs, I mean," to which her friend responded, "I care about those more than the kind around your neck."

Parental Controls Not Included



The last black-tie bash of the frenetic spring gala season was also one of its most glamorous: UNICEF's Children's Champion Awards Dinner, held at the Museum of Fine Arts.

After all, it's not every day you get to rub elbows with the evening's honorees: Ralph Lauren's dashing son David and his wife, model-turned-activist and granddaughter/niece of two U.S. presidents, Lauren Bush Lauren (who earns bonus points for having the same first and last name).

Prominent among the throng: co-chairs Alli Achtmeyer and Bryan Rafanelli, über-humanitarian Charlene Engelhard, urban rock violinist Damien Escobar (who performed an electrifying set), the dearly beloved Caterina Bandini Schwinn, blond cupcake Courtney Forrester and her other half, Michael, blond bombshell Julia Owens, slave to fashion Laura Baldini squired by Hollywood hotshot Anthony Baldino, the arrestingly beautiful Dina Selkoe and her hipster husband, Greg, soignee beauty Katherine O'Keefe and the super-suave Ian, fashion plate extraordinaire Jeannette Hsu-McSweeney, party pair Alyson and Jeff Lindsey, brunette bombshell Tiffany Ortiz, the eternally lovely Sarah Monaco with the studly Tim Johnson, consul-general of Ecuador Beatriz de Stein, and one guest who accepted a compliment on his tuxedo by saying, "I was gonna wear nothing but leather chaps, but my wife talked me out of it."

> The evening's cutest exchange: A woman in the wholesale food business said, "Oh, I can get you Pearl's. Pearl hot dogs, I mean," to which her friend responded, "I care about those more than the kind around your neck."

Indeed, the evening might have been all about the kids, raising major dinero with a live auction that was not for the faint of heart, but the witty persiflage was decidedly adult, like the following exchange between two men:

"How tall are you?"

"Six-foot-three... lying down." ×××

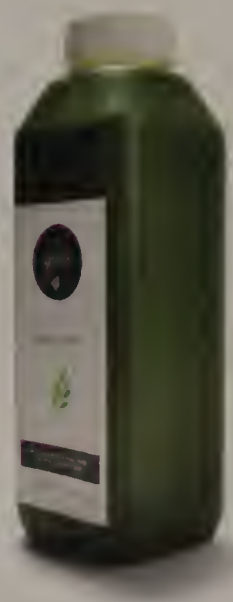
The IMPROPER

Dogged Persistence

Washington Post columnist and Victorian schoolmarm George Will famously wrote that football combines the worst elements of American culture, namely violence and committee meetings. But he missed the greater point that its staccato rhythms make for ideal commercial television, a fact we celebrate every February on our nation's greatest communal holiday: the Feast of the Layered Nacho Dip. Also called the Super Bowl.

Adam DeTour

We all remember where we were the night the Patriots won their first NFL title. I watched it in the company of an English bulldog puppy I had purchased a week or two earlier. He looked like a pig wrapped in velvet, but with extra helpings of forepaw, neck and jowl. I didn't let him sleep on the furniture, so, subtly, slowly—playing it cool so I wouldn't notice—he worked his neck and shoulder muscles up the crook of my leg and, through brawn and a willful defiance of gravity, belly-flopped onto my lap. Of course, I soon realized that a 16-pound pile of animal was snoring on me, so I hoisted him back onto the floor.



Then he did it again. Sidle. Grunt. Lap. Snore. Hoist. And again. And again. The cycle continued every couple of minutes without pause until Adam Vinatieri kicked his second magnificent field goal, by which time I couldn't cheer because I was hysterical from the insanity of repetition. The dog (or should I say underdog?) had beaten me by force of willpower.

The moral: Refusal to surrender will eventually undo your opponents, even if your only skill is impersonating a pig. Of course, our Patriots are much more talented than that, so they should do just dandy this season—a point expressed by Ezra's football preview and Christopher Price's profile of cover subject Stevan Ridley.

FRESH OFF THE FAIRWAY

THIS MONTH, AMATEUR GOLFERS have the opportunity to prove they're above par. The United States Golf Association (USGA) chose the Country Club in Brookline as the place to putt for the 2013 U.S. Amateur Championship, since this year marks the 100th anniversary of Brookline caddie Francis Ouimet's U.S. Open win at the very same venue. The blue-collar caddie's surprise victory, which later inspired a film starring Shia LaBeouf, is credited for bringing the sport from the club to the commoners.

"Ouimet's win put golf on the front page of newspapers in America for the first time," says curator/historian of the USGA Museum Michael Trostel. "His humility and working-class roots helped erode the perception that golf was a game exclusively for the elite, and in the decade that followed, more than two million Americans took up the game." This year's competition, which is held on Aug. 12-18 and open to spectators, pins 312 of the world's best against one another. Past winners include a teenaged Tiger Woods (who won three years in a row), reigning British Open champion Phil Mickelson and tea tycoon Arnold Palmer. Don't expect any windmills or colorful castles on this course—the U.S. Amateur isn't kids' stuff.

Good Eats

Pulling Ahead

Xi'an is a long way to travel for hand-pulled noodles, and frankly so is Chelmsford—until recently, our nearest source for the wide, ropy dough ribbons native to central China. Noodle nuts rejoiced last month when Gene Wu added a second location of his wildly popular noodle and sandwich shop, Gene's Chinese Flatbread Cafe, to Downtown Crossing. For now, the city cafe's menu and hours are limited—no lamb stew or chilled noodles, and no dinner or weekend service—but the signature chewy strands, available with or without cumin lamb, might just be better (and more garlicky) than ever.

DELUTY GOES DEEP

STRONG-WILLED The first floor of the renovated Forum

BOSTON SUBURBS LIKE BROOKLINE and Newton have long been hotspots for destination dining. More recently, farther-flung towns like Lincoln and Concord have seen increased foodie action (AKA Bistro, 80 Thoreau). Now it may be Deep Suburbia's turn, with the opening of 29 Sudbury, in the eponymous town, from South End chef Evan Deluty of Stella and his business partner, Greg Hill of WAAF (107.3 FM).

Why Sudbury? It's outside Route 128, past Newton, Weston, even Wayland. But it's next to Stow, where Hill lives, and "the people of Sudbury are long overdue for a great restaurant," Deluty says. "Great" doesn't necessarily mean a wildly creative menu, he adds. "When I go to a restaurant, I know what I'm going to order," he says. Diners at 29 Sudbury will choose from Stella favorites like the Bolognese, as well as raw-bar specialties and pizzas cooked in a coal-fired oven. And they'll often see Deluty behind the stove in the open kitchen: "I'm definitely hands-on," he says. "My name's on it."

So, is Deep Suburbia the new frontier? "I consider it Metro West," says Deluty, adding with a laugh, "It's not Worcester!"

Forum is reopening with a flourish. Extensively damaged by the Boston Marathon bombings, the Boylston Street restaurant's facade now sports a different logo and fresh awnings. Inside, there's a new bar, a new chef—Dan Schroeder, a veteran of numerous swanky New England country clubs—and a new menu, featuring dishes such as house-made gnocchi with wild mushrooms, duck breast with sweet corn and pickled cherries, and lots of gluten-free items. Welcome back!

LEUKEMIA & LYMPHOMA SOCIETY®
fighting blood cancers

Help us cross the finish line of cures.

The Leukemia & Lymphoma Society (LLS) is the largest voluntary health organization dedicated to funding the most promising blood cancer research anywhere. Fundraising campaigns like Team In Training (TNT) and Light The Night Walks have helped power LLS in the discovery and delivery of breakthrough therapies and, in some cases cures. These treatments are saving the lives of blood cancer patients, not someday, but today.

After 25 years and 570,000 participants helping LLS invest more than $875 million in blood cancer research, TNT has become the most influential endurance sports training program for charity in the world. When you participate in TNT you're helping fund therapies that save lives at events like:

COOK

(617-964-2665) cooknewton.com

BASIC INSTINCT

Paul Turano is known for his straightforward dishes at Tryst, his Arlington eatery. Now he's taken that approach to the next level at his new restaurant in Newtonville. When his family was mulling over names for the new spot, his toddler daughter piped in: "Daddy, you cook, right?" Thus, when the place opens in late August, it'll simply be known as Cook.

"I wanted it to be a neighborhood place, doing approachable food, where it just is what it is. I thought that name said it all. We're just going to cook really good food," Turano says. Tryst stands as a neighborhood staple in Arlington, and he's hoping to make the same connection with the Newton crowd. But the Newton bistro won't just be Tryst-Take-Two.

"It's going to have a very, very unique look. It's got a lot of steel, high ceilings, a wood-fired pizza oven that you can sit at," he says. "We got all reclaimed wood for our tabletops from the Waltham Watch Factory."

Cook will offer dinner to start, but plans are in the works to expand to lunch and brunch. The menu is broken up into six categories: snacks, cold, hot, crispy, grilled and wood-fired. All the American bistro standards make an appearance—burgers, pasta, steak frites—but there's a dash of difference in a few offerings such as the tuna pizzette ($16) and soppressata flatbread ($14).

After spending seven years at Tryst, Anne Moynihan will be one of two co-executive chefs at Cook. Co-chef Anthony Welch has spent time as sous chef at the Four Seasons. Turano plans to split his time evenly between his two restaurants, but the "approachable" theme will be consistent. He promises no menu items will cost more than $25.

"I want the restaurant to be a place I'd want to eat," Turano says. "I live on the South Shore, and I'm always looking for a place to eat, just like what we're going to do here."

MATT MARTINELLI

Q&A

DO OR SPY

Local thriller novelist Joseph Finder reveals the story behind Paranoia, his second book-turned-film, starring Harrison Ford, Liam Hemsworth and Gary Oldman, which hits theaters Aug. 16.

What draws you to the thriller genre over others?

We love to read them. I grew up reading James Bond, and then in college I discovered Robert Ludlum. I really wanted to write the sort of books that I found I couldn't put down. I also love speculating about conspiracy theories. I like the basic story in each of my books where the ordinary guy gets caught up in extraordinary circumstances. Paranoia is about a regular guy who hates his job, is not particularly ambitious at the outset and is kind of disillusioned. We see him forced into becoming a spy and then sort of falling in love with the work that he's doing, realizing that he can do this.

How did you get the idea for Paranoia?

I got the idea around 1999 from a guy in the CIA who told me that there was more spying going on between companies than between countries. The more I dug into this, the more I learned that a number of companies have hired former intelligence officers to conduct this kind of work—ex-CIA, ex-NSA, ex-FBI and even ex-KGB. Corporate security is another area of espionage that I think works in a lot of ways like spying does between countries.

Were you involved in the CIA?

I was recruited by the CIA and trained in intelligence. I found out pretty early on that it wasn't as interesting as writing about it. I was able to get access to a lot more information as an outsider and as a writer than I would have been had I been working for the agency.

What sort of research did you do for Paranoia?

For Paranoia, I talked to people who do corporate security. They're called penetration and intrusion specialists and are hired by companies to break into the company themselves. I also spent a lot of time hanging out at companies like Apple computer and Cisco Systems and Hewlett Packard, getting a sense of what the everyday life is like. I came in as an outsider and asked a lot of rude and impertinent questions. Like, "Why did you fire that guy?" and "How did it feel to fire him?"

Are you excited about the film?

Oh, yeah. I think the trailer's amazing. It's weird because I remember thinking up the story, and I remember when I was working on it. It existed only in my head. To see it played out on the screen with these fantastic actors is kind of unreal!

Guac Walk

Guacamole doesn't belong on tasting menus. It belongs at tailgates. It doesn't need to be prepped tableside or cost more than your entree. But it does need fresh ingredients and bright flavors that'll make you sigh and say, "Te quiero." Here, we made the sacrifice and tested the guac at local eateries to see who's got the green thumb.

HANNAH LOTT-SCHWARTZ AND HANNAH SHEINBERG

El Centro ★

True, the chips at this authentic eatery are outstanding and the main dishes excellent, but this was the only guacamole we didn't finish. This green creamy matter contains only avocado, pico de gallo, lime and salt, but inexplicably left our mouths with an acrid aftertaste.

$5, 472 Shawmut Ave., Boston (617-262-5708)

Lolita ★★★★½

Holy guacamole, let's build a shrine to this dip. Both the fresco and the guacamole come topped with an abundance of fresh pico, with cilantro, onion and serrano chiles mixed in. We're willing to forgive the slightly overmashed consistency in light of the guac's unique spice profile, which has us digging for crumbs in the bottom of chip-to-another-table.

$8, 271 Dartmouth St., Boston (617-369-5609)

Lone Star Taco Bar ★★★★

Loaded with chunks of lime and a smattering of cilantro, this guacamole nearly steals our hearts. Until we taste the sodium-ridden mess it is. Avocado, tomato, onion, lime, cilantro, salt and pepper—how can you go wrong? Apparently, you can't go wrong with a lot of salt. Ouch.

smooth to chunky. Tangy and sweet with a little hot sauce heat, the guac can be an app or a meal in itself, and either way it's batting a thousand.

$9, 479 Cambridge St., Allston (617-782-8226)
lonestar-boston.com

The Painted Burro ★★½

It's good, but the mash of avocado with white onion, lime and salt doesn't feature nearly enough cilantro. Mixing it with the complimentary salsa gives it an oomph that's otherwise lacking. Add a point for the big, tasty chips.

$9, 219 Elm St., Somerville (617-776-0005)

Taco Party ★★★

The competition's underdog, this food-truck guac carries a citrusy tang and fresh flavors but isn't substantial enough to stand on its own (gimme them tacos). Overall it could use more ingredients—mere avocado, onion and lime does not make for the most memorable guacamole.

$3, check website for locations, Boston,

PRETTY PLEASE?

TO THE WOMAN IN THE WHITE HONDA CIVIC ON 93 NORTH: I understand that mornings are crazy and traffic is awful, but is it really necessary to put your makeup on in the car? I watched you apply concealer, powder, blush, eyeshadow, eyeliner (that was scary) and mascara from my rearview mirror, all the while hoping you wouldn't rear-end me. I know we all want to cover those under-eye circles and look halfway presentable at work, but next time will you please just set your alarm clock five minutes earlier? Many thanks.

You're making the rest of us look bad

To the person blithering on the phone while walking through a lit pedestrian crosswalk: As you grazed a woman, you weren't completely distracted; you yelled at the poor thing. Jerk! Maybe the police don't care, as I've seen them do the same thing near the Statehouse.

Paying attention

To the T driver who stopped and waited for me as I ran to the Fenway stop on the D Line: Thank you. Most T drivers would have closed the door in my face, and grinned at me as they drove away. This particular morning I was running late to work and desperately hoping to catch that T. You saw me running down the stairs, and even though the T doors were already closed, you opened them up again for me. I made it to my early-morning meeting on time.

Another rushed commuter

To the early-bird tourists taking pictures in Copley Square: I'm sorry that I'm always in your way. Whether it's walking in front of the photographer right when they click, or accidentally photobombing in the background, I know that you're probably annoyed with me. Truth is, I don't have time to wait for you to set up your shot—Copley is my shortcut to work. But seeing you all there always makes me remember how beautiful and picturesque the city is, even if I'm quickly walking by it.

Indie Pop

Simpson Spring, a naturally bubbling water source in South Easton, started making waves in the 19th century. Namesake landowner Samuel Simpson's grandson-in-law used it to make popular carbonated beverages—sarsaparilla, cream, white birch and coffee sodas, the last of which was shipped to Manhattan and sold at Macy's as "Sparkoffee." Those throwback flavors and more are still hand-mixed and sold by the current owners, the Bertarelli family, who attest that Macy's suggestion for the coffee soda—enriching it with half-and-half—remains a good one.

NAME: Smoke Over Bourbon

PRICE: $12

INVENTOR: Nebo bartender Jenna Pollock

INGREDIENTS: Larceny Bourbon, St-Germain, lemon, Lunetta prosecco

SECRET: A Glenmorangie Scotch rinse (or rather spritz) imparts a whiff of smoke.

TASTE: A perfect whiskey drink for five o'clock, or if the weather's too warm for a Manhattan. Order this as an aperitif, since the lemon nose opens your taste buds. Then the bourbon rolls in "a little bit smoky, a little bit bitter," Pollock says. "Almost like it has an Angostura bitters character to it." The whiskey's honey notes cleanse the palate, and the St-Germain's sweetness lightens the burn but doesn't extinguish it. Fizz from the prosecco nips off the citrus at the end.

IN SUMMARY: It's got the framework of a whiskey sour with Italian finishes and handcrafted Kentucky details. Says Pollock, "I'm a whiskey girl all the way."

PAIR IT WITH: Polenta con scampi. The shrimp, garlic and lemon butter pop with the drink's citrus flavors. And it cleanly slices through the richness of ricotta gnocchi with sweet sausage.

CONTEXT: "I wanted to keep [Nebo's bar program] as local as I could, but incorporate Italian products," Pollock says. "I wanted it to complement Italian food and have Italians come in and recognize some of the flavors." Also, in harmony with the kitchen philosophy, Pollock kept the ingredients simple. Hence, cocktails like the Manhattan di Roma, which uses amaro as well as vermouth and cherry bitters instead of Angostura. "I try bold flavors mellowed by other ingredients."

NEXT STEPS: Try one of Pollock's drinks that delves into less popular flavors like Chartreuse. "I think, how can I play with these spices?" By mixing Benedictine with gin in the Funkin' Monk, for instance.

Shampoo Élysées

Comparing Newbury Street to the famed Champs-Élysées may be an exaggeration, but the arrival of trend-setting salon Camille Albane Paris brings European sophistication to the Hub. In Albane's flagship U.S. salon, expert mixologists use Pigma products to concoct color-optimizing shampoo, personalized for each client. Suelen Amaral, stylist, colorist, makeup artist and U.S. artistic director assistant for Camille Albane, gives us formulas for a few color and texture combinations, so you won't have to hide your hair under a beret.

IDENTITY CRISIS

A novel about skirting cultural divides

THIS DEBUT NOVEL TELLS the story of Mina, whose family fled Iran when she was a girl. Now, at 25, she's putting up with her overbearing mother, Darya, who wants to find her an Iranian husband. Mom's version of Match.com brings on an embarrassingly polite date that, of course, fails. But Kamali beautifully renders the family's blend of assimilation and affection for their roots. The story brims with details of style, language and food that you'll want to eat up.

Darya develops a gentle crush on Sam, whom she meets in a math class, and her doctor husband's equally gentle toleration of the infatuation is sweetly comic. Mina (now in business school) and Darya go "home" to Iran, but it's during a period of repressive Islamic fundamentalism when women must cover their heads and behave with extreme modesty.

Together Tea
By Marjan Kamali

Kamali teaches writing at Boston University.

Mina's Iranian-American identity comes up against many contradictions during her journey. The Iranian headscarf-wearing women secretly dance, flirt and party almost more than Americans, making Mina, ironically, feel like a rather puritanical outsider. How romantically delicious it is when she meets a fellow home-again Iranian who lives in Connecticut. It's a twinning not of dating algorithms, or even culture, exactly, but of souls. ✖✖✖

Iranian-American. Neither the first word nor the second really belonged to her. Her place was on the hyphen, and on the hyphen she would stay... On the hyphen she would sit and on the hyphen she would stand and soon, like a seasoned acrobat, she would balance there perfectly, never falling, never choosing either side over the other, content with walking that thin line.

WONDERFULL

The Connecticut resort Winvian is a country fantasy.

IN ARCADIA EGO The Spa at Winvian and a view from a cottage bathroom

WHEN ALICE WENT down the rabbit hole, she rarely found Relais & Châteaux standards of guest service. The shellfish in her story were weirdly talkative, not served in an aromatic broth. Nor, for all of Wonderland's marvels, did she experience an outstanding ashiatstu massage. This was her loss, really, since the country resort Winvian combines a Carrollian sense of whimsy with a tasting menu that far exceeds the scope of tea parties or mock turtle soup.

After driving through the Litchfield Hills of western Connecticut, guests arrive at a white wooden gate that swings open onto a shady lane flanked by stone fences, suitable for Robert Frost allusions. To the left, a meadow unrolls in sunflowers and vegetable gardens. Up the lane, the Seth Bird building—an 18th-century clapboard house that serves as the restaurant, reception and game room—overlooks a pond that seems abruptly scooped out of the grass. Checking in downstairs, you feel like you've entered the rumpus room of a monied, but unstuffy, Yankee clan with a liking for comfortable antiques. There's a stone fireplace, a shuffleboard table and a wet bar, so it's a welcoming spot to study a map of the compound and locate your private cottage.

The cottages define Winvian. There are 18 of them, each unique in architecture and furnishings, each embodying a theme. Choosing one is a fun, personal Rorschach test. Do the modern lines and bold colors of the "Music" cottage sing to you more than the chunky masonry and Barney Rubble chic of "Stone"? Is your inner frat boy tickled by the brooding Greco-Egyptian columns of "Secret Society," or does the aluminum and glass of "Greenhouse" seem hotter? But while you can sleep in a beaver dam or a treehouse, the property avoids kitsch through the application of relentlessly tasteful interior decorating.[1]

Take the "Woodlands" cottage, for example. The exterior looks like an upscale summer rental, although the eye is drawn to its oversized windows. Stepping inside, however, the eye goggles at the colossal, two-story, polished tree rising through the middle of the building like Yggdrasil by way of Country Living magazine. Veritable groves of trunks sprout from the corners, or squat, cloven with their rings exposed, in the form of his and hers bathroom

The cottages are grouped into three different price tiers, depending on size and amenities.

The resort is full-service, so order a full breakfast to your cottage. Or a house charcuterie and cheese plate. Or a round of cold beers with peanuts.

If your legs tire of cycling, the staff will drive you wherever you'd like on the property.

AN OPEN BROOK The 113-acre grounds sinks opposite a "natural stone" waterfall. A huge sunken tub justifies the picture windows—you get an immersive view of the forest while you soak. If the steam shower and heated bathroom floor don't make this the most magical sylvan idyll this side of Narnia, note the flat-screen television that pops up automatically out of the foot of the tree-framed bed. Dryads and satyrs would blush with envy.

Pairs of bicycles are parked outside the cottages, and pedaling is the easiest way to navigate the 113-acre property. Take a ride past the evening's salad course in the pesticide-free gardens to reach the extensive spa building. Washed in natural light, with pale woods and a neutral palette, the spa's airy architecture breathes serenity. There are couples' packages, signature aromatherapy and Thai massage, but you needn't plumb the menu past deep tissue. These treatments are the most exacting you'll find between Boston and New York.

Retire to your cottage for a rest before dinner, served in the quiet, elegant rooms upstairs at the Seth Bird building. You can opt for a three- or four-course prix fixe, but you should definitely opt. Chef Chris Eddy's inventions are the stuff of food editor dreams: warm sweetbreads with grilled beets, garden wax beans, lardons and house-made raisins; grilled opah with garden vegetables and fresh-picked herbs; strawberry rhubarb soup with buttermilk panna cotta. If the resort isn't fully booked, you may even find yourself savoring your wine pairings in privacy.

After coffee, quaff a digestif downstairs over a game of foosball or pool. The click of billiard balls, the lingering flavors from dessert and, above all, the unbuttoned comfort give Winvian the feel of a weekend retreat among friends. Then return to your bedroom tree trunks and waterfalls, reminded that this is, after all, a wonderland. ×××

HIDDEN MANNA

Soulful Puerto Rican fare, hiding in plain sight

Maná Escondido Cafe
68 Aguadilla St., Boston
(617-266-0900)

HUMBLE PACKAGES With dishes like the pollo guisado and the tripleta, this small South End spot delivers outsized flavor.

ARE YOU A FOODIE, OR A food nerd? In an era when you can DVR 200 hours of food TV every day, your dad is posting restaurant reviews on Yelp, and roughly 10 billion pictures of gourmet burgers have been Instagrammed, aren't foodies dreadfully passé? When's the last time your foodie compass led you to a true discovery? The food nerd, by contrast, doggedly beats the bushes for singular dining experiences. Foodies rarely darken Chinatown doorsteps, shuddering at less-than-shiny dining rooms; food nerds see humble digs as a promising sign. I don't expect to meet many foodies at Maná Escondido, a tiny South End counter-service joint offering traditional Puerto Rican fare, but food nerds will want to figure out where the hell Aguadilla Street is.

Reason one: frituras (fried snacks) from the warmer next to the register, served the second you order. The pastelillo ($1.50) is a bubbly-crusted half-moon turnover filled with mildly spiced ground beef, chicken, shrimp or cod; relleno de papa ($1.50) offers a sphere of mashed potato with a crunchy coating and a spicier, juicier ground-beef filling, while the quick-to-sell-out alcapurria ($2) is a cylinder of grated plantains and yautía (a starchy tropical vegetable) that's fried to a crunchy, beautiful dark brown and filled with spicy ground beef or crab meat. Made each morning by the owner's mom and fried in batches throughout the day, these fritters are fresh, greaseless and flaky—what Hot Pockets tearfully dream of becoming.

Puerto Rico's storied mofongo ($6.50-$8.50) is fried unripe plantains mashed with garlic, mounded into an edible bowl, filled here with one of eight vegetable, meat or seafood options, and served with a side of broth. Mofongo de pernil ($7) overstuffs the plantain shell with delectable slow-roasted pork shoulder, topped by a salty, crisp/chewy hunk of chicharrón (fried pork rind). After 20 to 30 minutes of to-order preparation, you might think it's smallish, but it's substantial enough to make a meal.

Perhaps half of the menu's combos (meat entrees with a side dish) are available on any given day; ask to see what's on. Pollo orniado, rotisserie chicken ($12.50 whole, $8.50 half), falls apart into juicy pieces with crisp skin redolent of herbs and garlic. Pollo guisado ($7.50 large, $5.50 small) features bone-in, gently stewed chicken brightly flavored and tinged orange with sazón (herbs, aromatics and achiote). Sides include fine yellow rice flecked with pigeon peas, sticky-sweet caramelized maduros (sweet ripe plantains) and outstanding tostones (savory green plantains, sliced and flattened into big discs and fried crisp), like the french fry's hipper Latino cousin. These also can be ordered in generous standalone portions ($2-$3.50).

I think of mondongo ($7.95 large, $3.95 small) as a weekend restorative, but it's served every day here, and it's terrific: big chunks of long-cooked, slightly gamy, alternately tender and chewy beef tripe in a tomato broth with cubes of potato and yautía. Smaller lunchtime appetites might be sated with one of 15 sandwiches (again, ask what's available) like the tripleta ($7.95 large, $5.95 small), which fills baguette-like bread with chopped steak, roast pork, ham, Swiss cheese, a garlicky ketchup/mayo dressing and crunchy potato sticks, all finished on a plancha to get the bread toasted, the cheese melted and the whole thing nicely flattened. It's fantastic, like a collision between a steak bomb and a Cubano.

Breakfast here is one of the more budget-friendly offerings in the neighborhood. Two eggs, home fries and rounds of fatty, fried Puerto Rican salami reminiscent of Portuguese linguiça go for a mere $4.50; a warm, just-made pastelillo filled with ham and cheese costs a trifling buck-fifty. Among the assortment of American and Caribbean soft drinks ($1–$1.50), the food-friendliest include coconut soda, tropical nectars of tamarind or guava, and Malta India, a sort of molasses-scented root beer.

While bright and clean, the dining room is a homely, bare-bones affair with a handful of seats. Food is served in plastic foam containers with plastic utensils. Service is unfailingly friendly and helpful to the occasional befuddled Anglo who wanders in—no Spanish needed. If you're ready to burnish your food-nerd bona fides, Maná Escondido offers an object lesson in what you should be seeking: traditional cuisine cooked by ex-pats for ex-pats, served in big portions at nice prices with no dumbing down for the natives. Your foodie friends can go find themselves another $15 burger somewhere else. ✖✖✖

FOR GOOD

Morgan Memorial Goodwill Industries hosted its benefit "The Good Party" at the charity's 1010 Harrison Ave. headquarters on June 13. Set under a tent with a beach-party vibe, the casual gala included a main course and dessert catered by a dozen restaurants and bakeries. The event was attended by 325 people and raised $250,000.

The American Diabetes Association held its annual "Father of the Year Awards" on June 11 at the Seaport Boston Hotel. The charity's Father's Day Council presented three local businessmen with this year's honor at a dinner that featured silent and live auctions. Attended by 275 people, the event raised $300,000.

STATE OF THE ART

The movie apocalypse might not be here yet.

THE SKY IS FALLING IN Hollywood, and Steven Spielberg saw it coming. Speaking at USC in June, the director predicted a disaster. "There's going to be an implosion where three or four or maybe even a half-dozen mega-budget movies are going to go crashing to the ground, and that's going to change the paradigm." As if on cue, White House Down, The Lone Ranger, Pacific Rim and R.I.P.D. tanked spectacularly over the next weeks. Suddenly, it's doom and gloom all over the place, with the entertainment media collectively mourning the death of cinema. Box-office receipts are down 19 percent from last year, a sobering statistic when you consider the astronomical inflation of ticket prices thanks to IMAX, 3-D and every other stupid gimmick for which they gouge you.

Speaking as somebody who actually has to sit through this stuff, I can say that taken individually, this season's tentpoles aren't any more awful than what we normally see in the summer. In fact, I enjoyed quite a few more of them than usual this year. But taken in total, there's fatigue. When another major city or two gets destroyed every week and seemingly every third act goes on for 20 extra minutes of explosions and CGI noise, it reminds me of when I was in fourth grade and ate a peanut butter and Marshmallow Fluff sandwich every afternoon for lunch. The day came when I never wanted to eat one again.

But just as there are other things to eat besides Fluffernutters, there's more to movies than just superheroes and sequels. Look beyond the blockbusters, and 2013 has, without fanfare, become one of the most exciting years for film since I started reviewing them professionally in 1999. It's only August, and I could already put together a credible Top 10 list. Alphabetically, off the top of my head: The Act of Killing, Before Midnight, Fruitvale Station, Gimme the Loot, Like Someone in Love, Mud, No, Something in the Air, Spring Breakers and 20 Feet From Stardom.

We're fortunate enough to live in a community where independently owned and operated cinemas like the Brattle, Coolidge Corner and West Newton offer an alternative to Hollywood's assembly line product. Try to tune out the din of multimillion-dollar advertising blitzes, fast food tie-ins or Hasbro toys, and you'll find a wealth of stories and experiences beyond the fanboy demographic to which mega-productions pander. They're just not being shoved in your face.

Besides, the paradigm shift Spielberg spoke of is already underway. We're going to need to redetermine what we conventionally call "a movie." Earlier this year, Steven Soderbergh announced his retirement from theatrical filmmaking, and then unveiled Behind the Candelabra, the Michael Douglas tour de force Liberace biopic that's one of the best pictures this brilliant filmmaker ever helmed. It won raves at the Cannes Film Festival, but aired on HBO because no American studio would touch it with a 10-foot tentpole.

This and other signs suggest that the future of cinema might be at home. Upstart indie distributors like IFC Films, Magnolia Pictures and the Weinstein Company's Radius division release their films via video on-demand and digital platforms concurrent with their theatrical runs. All of a sudden, viewers in markets without art houses have instant access to specialty releases. Last month, Ryan Gosling and Nicolas Winding Refn's blood-soaked follow-up to Drive, Only God Forgives, stiffed in theaters but was a massive hit on iTunes. My most beloved film of the year so far, Gimme the Loot, was yanked locally by the Kendall after a single week, yet had a long and prosperous run on-demand. There must be money here, as majors such as Paramount just announced plans for copycat specialty VOD divisions.

In one sense this is sad, because I'm a big believer in moviegoing as a communal experience. Yet these days that depends on where we're doing the communing. Corporate chains charge top dollar for presentation that's too often inferior to a half-decent home entertainment system. Sure, watching Terrence Malick's To the Wonder on your laptop is hardly ideal viewing for a visual tone poem, but let's face it, a lot of cinemas are also hardly ideal right now.

Yes, the times they are a changin'. Yet it's hard to for me to share in the pessimism when there are so many challenging and exciting pictures being made, and being made available to millions of viewers who would otherwise never have a chance to see them. The major studios may be offering peanut butter and Fluff, but we've got more options than ever on the menu. ×××

VILLAGE PRESERVATION

Okkervil River
plays Boston Calling at City Hall Plaza on Sept. 7.

YOU CAN'T COUNT ON CELL-phones in Meriden, N.H., a fact raised by Okkervil River leader Will Sheff during a dropout-laced call from the small village where he grew up. "Even now, Meriden is very isolated," the singer-songwriter says. "It does lag behind in that way, and that's one of the things I enjoy about it."

Sheff cites a drive down a flooded road where he waited for a flagman to let him pass. "I sort of sat there on the dirt road, and I got really impatient," he says. "And I thought, 'I'm just here in this town. It's a beautiful sky and beautiful woods with a field rolling by. Who cares? I'm just going to enjoy this moment in my life.'"

He's sharing similar moments from his Meriden past in Okkervil River's The Silver Gymnasium, out Sept. 3, and related activities have brought him back to his hometown. An advance video for "It Was My Season" showcases the local town hall's 3-D Maxfield Parrish stage set with simulated sunrise-to-sunset lighting. In another video, he and a childhood friend play a song at various open-mic nights.

"At the end of [the project], I will be destitute and have a full head of white hair," says Sheff, 37. "I can retire to Meriden, and I'll be the Pepperidge Farm guy."

He's spent most of his adult life away from New England, having moved to Austin, Texas, to launch Okkervil River, a band that's earned acclaim for their folky, literate indie-rock and plays the Boston Calling festival on Sept. 7. The group also backed psychedelic pioneer Roky Erickson for 2010's True Love Cast Out All Evil, an album that Sheff produced in addition to writing liner notes that earned a Grammy nomination.

The Silver Gymnasium suggests a new high point for Sheff, who says a musical memoir on his '80s small-town pre-adolescence "was something that I always knew in my mind I was going to do." It's become a passionate project, echoed in album-cover artist William Schaff's colorful gatefold map of Meriden landmarks, from the boarding school where Sheff's parents taught to the local video store.

"Like a lot of people, I have a lot of feelings caught up in my earliest memories, my memories of being a kid and the culture," Sheff says. "I always thought Meriden was a fascinating place, and I wanted to write about it so much, not because I thought it was more interesting than any other place, but I feel if you go after something that you have a personal connection with, people respond."

The album brims with details of time and place, including references to Fleetwood Mac hits, Atari, and locales like the Maple Street Bridge and Lake of the Strangled Crane. And it springs to life through stream-of-consciousness exuberance in Sheff's lyrics, undercut by slightly '80s-flavored rock. "You shoot for some unspecified place in the distance," he says of his open-ended writing approach. "If you arrive at exactly the thing you planned on creating, maybe you did something wrong."

One concept endured: friendship in place of romance. "Friendship is a really important aspect of life and relationships," Sheff says, "and it becomes more important to you also when you're an adult." The album's lyrical perspective flickers between that of an adult looking back and that of a kid, he says, citing "Down Down the Deep River," with its imagery of lying awake in a tent and swapping stories with your best friend.

"I always liked how on the Kinks' Village Green Preservation Society, they have 'Starstruck,' which doesn't really seem to relate to the rest of the album," Sheff says. "It's sort of an album about being a kid in the country, and then there's a song about being a rock star in the city in the middle of it. For me, that works great. It's like a flash-forward, where everything before and after feels kind of sweeter. I don't feel the need to be completely balanced to a certain time and character all the time. It's better to let it be a little bit kaleidoscope-y." ✖✖✖

THE 19TH HOLE

The best part of golf happens after the game.

THERE'S AN OLD LINE: "Golf is the only thing in life in which you get what you deserve." I think this is correct. For non-golfers, maybe this will make you a bit curious about the sport. After all, what is the allure of an activity that takes four hours or more (mostly more) to play? And if you stop to have lunch and a beer after playing 18 holes, it can be an all-day affair.

There are about 28 million golfers in America. In 1993, there were about 25 million. Not much growth in 20 years, when our population has popped to more than 300 million people. But the walking and the vistas and the companionship—and the fact that you're playing in competition against others while very much playing against yourself—is the ultimate head game. That's the biggest attraction of golf. How long is it going to take in a round until your body and your mind betray you?

There have been thousands of books published about golf, but I never see any discussions of the 19th hole, the aftermath of the match and where it can lead. After the game and a few beers or whiskeys, unusual things can happen. I had a friend whom I'd meet after work in the summers, to play until it was dark, and then have some drinks. To spice up the game, we'd have a contest before we finished. When the light faded, we'd drop two balls on the third fairway. The second and third holes were bisected by a narrow but well-traveled road. We'd each hit a wedge or a 9-iron over the road to the second green, a blind shot, and dangerous. If you hit your shot short, chunked it or hit it fat, you could actually hit a passing car and hurt someone. But we were single and stupid, and the player whose shot landed closest to the pin did not have to pay for the drinks. It is always a test of character to have a few bucks on the line. It sweetens the game.

I'm grateful we never hit anyone, and that I'm no longer a member of that club so I'm not tempted to try to hit one over the road as the sun is going down. At the same club, I once came in after a Sunday round for lunch with a couple of older friends. One of them, a high-strung man, rather intense about everything, was wearing a white linen suit, a crisp white shirt and an Hermès tie. "You're turned out for a Sunday," I said.

"I'm late already," he said, "but I really needed to play today, know what I'm sayin'? Blow off the steam of the week."

"I know what you're sayin'," I replied.

Meanwhile, he had just ordered his second bloody mary, and told me he had to be in Springfield 15 minutes ago for his father-in-law's birthday. A rich father-in-law. Opposite me at our table was the president of the club, a formal man with no sense of irony, but a giant sense of his role as upholder of the proper standards of behavior. Lunch had just been served, and my friend was taking a big gulp of his bloody when the glass slipped from his hand and ended up in the middle of his white suit. I saw it happen, and my friend went into a kind of shock. He grabbed his large linen napkin and began to stuff it, little by little, into his mouth.

The uptight president of the club had seen nothing of this, being occupied in conversation with the next table. My friend stuffed the entire napkin into his mouth, his knee-jerk reaction. Then the president swung back and said to my friend, "So you're going out to Springfield. Why again?"

There was my friend, covered in spicy tomato juice and vodka, his mouth full of napkin. And his life was flashing around him. He was an hour late for his father-in-law. His suit was ruined. He couldn't open his mouth because the president would know how strange he truly was.

So he lunged to his feet, pointed to his crotch as if to say, "Men's room," and disappeared.

Another bookend for an afternoon's golfing was the card game. Gin with a small group, poker if you were lingering. After a member-guest tournament, my buddy Larry, after drinks and dinner, stayed for poker with six other guys. When he left the club at about 10 that night, he found the driver side of his car completely caved in, rammed by someone who left no note. The next day, one of the caddies told Larry, "I saw it all. He piled into you, backed up and split." And he gave Larry the driver's name.

Larry never confronted the guy. About a month later in the city, Larry saw the offender park in Copley Square and go off to Joseph's, a great restaurant. Larry watched him go, waited until the car parkers were busy, went to the attendant's booth and scooped the hit-and-run guy's keys. Then Larry tossed the keys down a sewer near Copley Square.

"Revenge is a dish best eaten cold," he said.

SICK TRANSIT

The hell of modern air travel

I TRAVEL QUITE A BIT FOR WORK. In June, I had a stretch where I visited an airport nine out of 10 days. By the end of that stint, I was a broken man—on the 11th day, I couldn't get out of bed. I felt like I had mono, but a test came back negative. The lab said, "You have some sort of virus," but that's as specific as they could get. If I were a hipster, I'd probably take great pride in hosting a virus that you've never heard of. Yeah, I was into SARS before it got big.

Since I evidently discovered a new affliction contracted in planes and airports, let's call it O'Hare's Disease. Over the next few days, as I recuperated from O'Hare's, I had plenty of time to ruminate on the sad state of domestic air travel. It's never been great, and I'm afraid to say it's getting worse.

It's easy to say that the airlines are horrible, but we travelers are complicit in the dehumanization of modern flight. If we could collectively act with some semblance of dignity and basic compassion for our fellow man, I'd say half the problems would evaporate. OK, 30 percent of the problems.

Please, join in my disdain for the people who get out of their seats as soon as the plane reaches the gate, as if crouching like Gollum beneath the overhead bins will get you off the plane any faster. Let us shun the people who don't respect the armrest, either hogging it or, even worse, flipping it up because they don't otherwise fit within the dimensions of a single seat. And please, let's ostracize those who purchase overly complicated food immediately before boarding a plane—where did you even find chicken cacciatore in an airport?

Of course, the boarding process is enough to turn any given crowd—monks, Girl Scouts, Shriners—into a bloodthirsty Lord of the Flies-style mob of animals. The boarding hierarchy is all about the zone, and based on the looks of the clientele at your gate, you're boarding in The Twilight Zone. I once tried to board with the US Airways Visa cardholders—sometime after the Super Premium First Class Dividend Emperor zone but before the Enhanced Access Runway-Funway Silver crowd—and the gate agent actually asked to see the card. I pulled out my United Visa and was loudly rebuffed. Hey everyone, look at the guy who tried to pass off a United credit card as if it were essentially the same thing as a US Airways credit card! Get back in your caste, Untouchable!

I guess it tells you something that one of the biggest, most respected airplane manufacturers is named Airbus. They could've called the company anything they wanted, like CloudCruiser or SkyLimo or Happy-Wings. Instead, they conjure an image of a lumbering Greyhound plowing its way through the sky, packed to the gunwales with sneezing losers and their pathetic luggage—yeah, tie a ribbon on the handle to express your individuality, just like the 235 other people on this flight who tied ribbons on their dark-blue Wal-Mart carry-ons. Most of which will not, in fact, be carried on, because the overhead bins were immediately filled by the extravagantly folded jackets of the zone-two people and Platinum Mileage Supreme Sky Bosses.

Of course, international travel is a different situation, especially if you're lucky enough to fly business class. But even then, you're constantly reminded that there's some better situation for which you don't qualify. A few months ago I tried to walk into a Lufthansa lounge in Munich and was chased away by an angry German woman who directed me to a different door that led to some lesser hangout. As one of my planemates strode unimpeded toward the forbidden lounge, I asked, "What's in there, anyway?" "Unicorns," he replied.

And I don't rate unicorns. I don't rate anything. Despite living in airports, I've somehow managed to avoid attaining status on any airline. They sure don't make it easy. Because even if you fly 30,000 miles a month, you've still got to include 10 Elite Double-Down Gold segments at a Y-fare, buy three bags of really expensive trail mix at Hudson News and write and perform an original off-Broadway production entitled Planes! Then, if the reviews are good, you'll get to board with zone two.

Luckily I can rely on my sliver of local celebrity to help me out. Sometime in the middle of my travel bender, the US Airways gate agent at Logan looked at my boarding pass and said, "Hey, I like your column!" She then banished me to my seat, 38 rows back in the middle. That's right, I actually had a seat assignment. Pretty sweet. And the other people in my row were nice. They didn't even complain when I flipped up the armrests and spilled my chicken cacciatore. ×××

Soroff On BLYTHE DANNER

The famous actress tells us about Hollywood stars, filming in New Zealand and being Gwyneth's mom.

ACTRESS BLYTHE DANNER, 70, WAS BORN AND RAISED IN Philadelphia and got her acting start on the stage in Boston. She earned a Tony in 1970 for her Broadway debut in Butterflies Are Free, and she won two Emmys for her role on the television show Huff. Audiences know her as Robert De Niro's wife in Meet the Parents and the sequel Fockers movies, as Will's mother on Will & Grace and as Gwyneth Paltrow's mother in real life. Filmmaker Jake Paltrow is her other child by director/producer Bruce Paltrow. For 25 years, Danner was a member of the Williamstown Theatre Festival company, and she sits on their board. She performed on Aug. 11 with the Boston Pops at the Citizens Bank Pops by the Sea concert in Hyannis, and she lives in New York.

Jonathan Soroff: Is it tiresome to be known as Gwyneth's mom?
Blythe Danner: No. As a matter of fact, it's sort of what put me on the map, not that I really wanted to be on the map. I kind of like having some anonymity. I like going into the supermarket and having someone say, "Didn't you and I go to school together?" So some of the notoriety is welcome, and some of it isn't.

Any thoughts on all the negative stuff online about your daughter?
I don't read any of it. I will not. It's garbage, garbage, garbage. It reflects the callousness that's taken over our society. It's something I find so disgusting I would never look at it.

Favorite role of your career?
I've done a lot of Chekhov at Williamstown—The Seagull and The Three Sisters—that's probably been my most fulfilling work. On film, The Great Santini was a wonderful experience. The Fockers movies all paid the bills. I'm just grateful for work.

Favorite film or TV show of your husband's?
St. Elsewhere. I think it was wonderful, and I think it was deeply fulfilling for him.

Are you glad you raised your family in New York instead of L.A.?
Well, we were in L.A. for part of the time, because Bruce was working there. But when Gwyneth entered high school, we moved to New York, and I think the sensibility is closer to mine. The values are a little different. Personally, I much prefer the East Coast.

When are you coming back to Boston for a play?
When I'm asked. I loved the Theatre Company of Boston. That was such an incredible group of actors. I went up to observe them when I was still in college, and there was Dustin Hoffman and Bob Duvall, Jon Voight.

So where do you keep your Tony?
Broken, and I gave it to somebody whose wife worked for the Tonys, and she was going to have it repaired for me. I haven't seen it since.

So what is it about Williamstown that kept you coming back for 25 years?
To my mind, it's really the American repertory company. When Nikos Psacharopoulos started there and was doing serious work, he really helped me to grow more than anyone ever has.

How many bad jokes like "Apple of your eye" have you heard about your granddaughter?
Well, those all thankfully expired within the first year. We all have crazy names in our family. My newest granddaughter is Whistler.

When are you going to do a film or play with both Gwyneth and Jake?
I hope before I'm in my grave. I've done a couple of things with Gwyneth. We did a TV thing, and we did Sylvia in New Zealand.

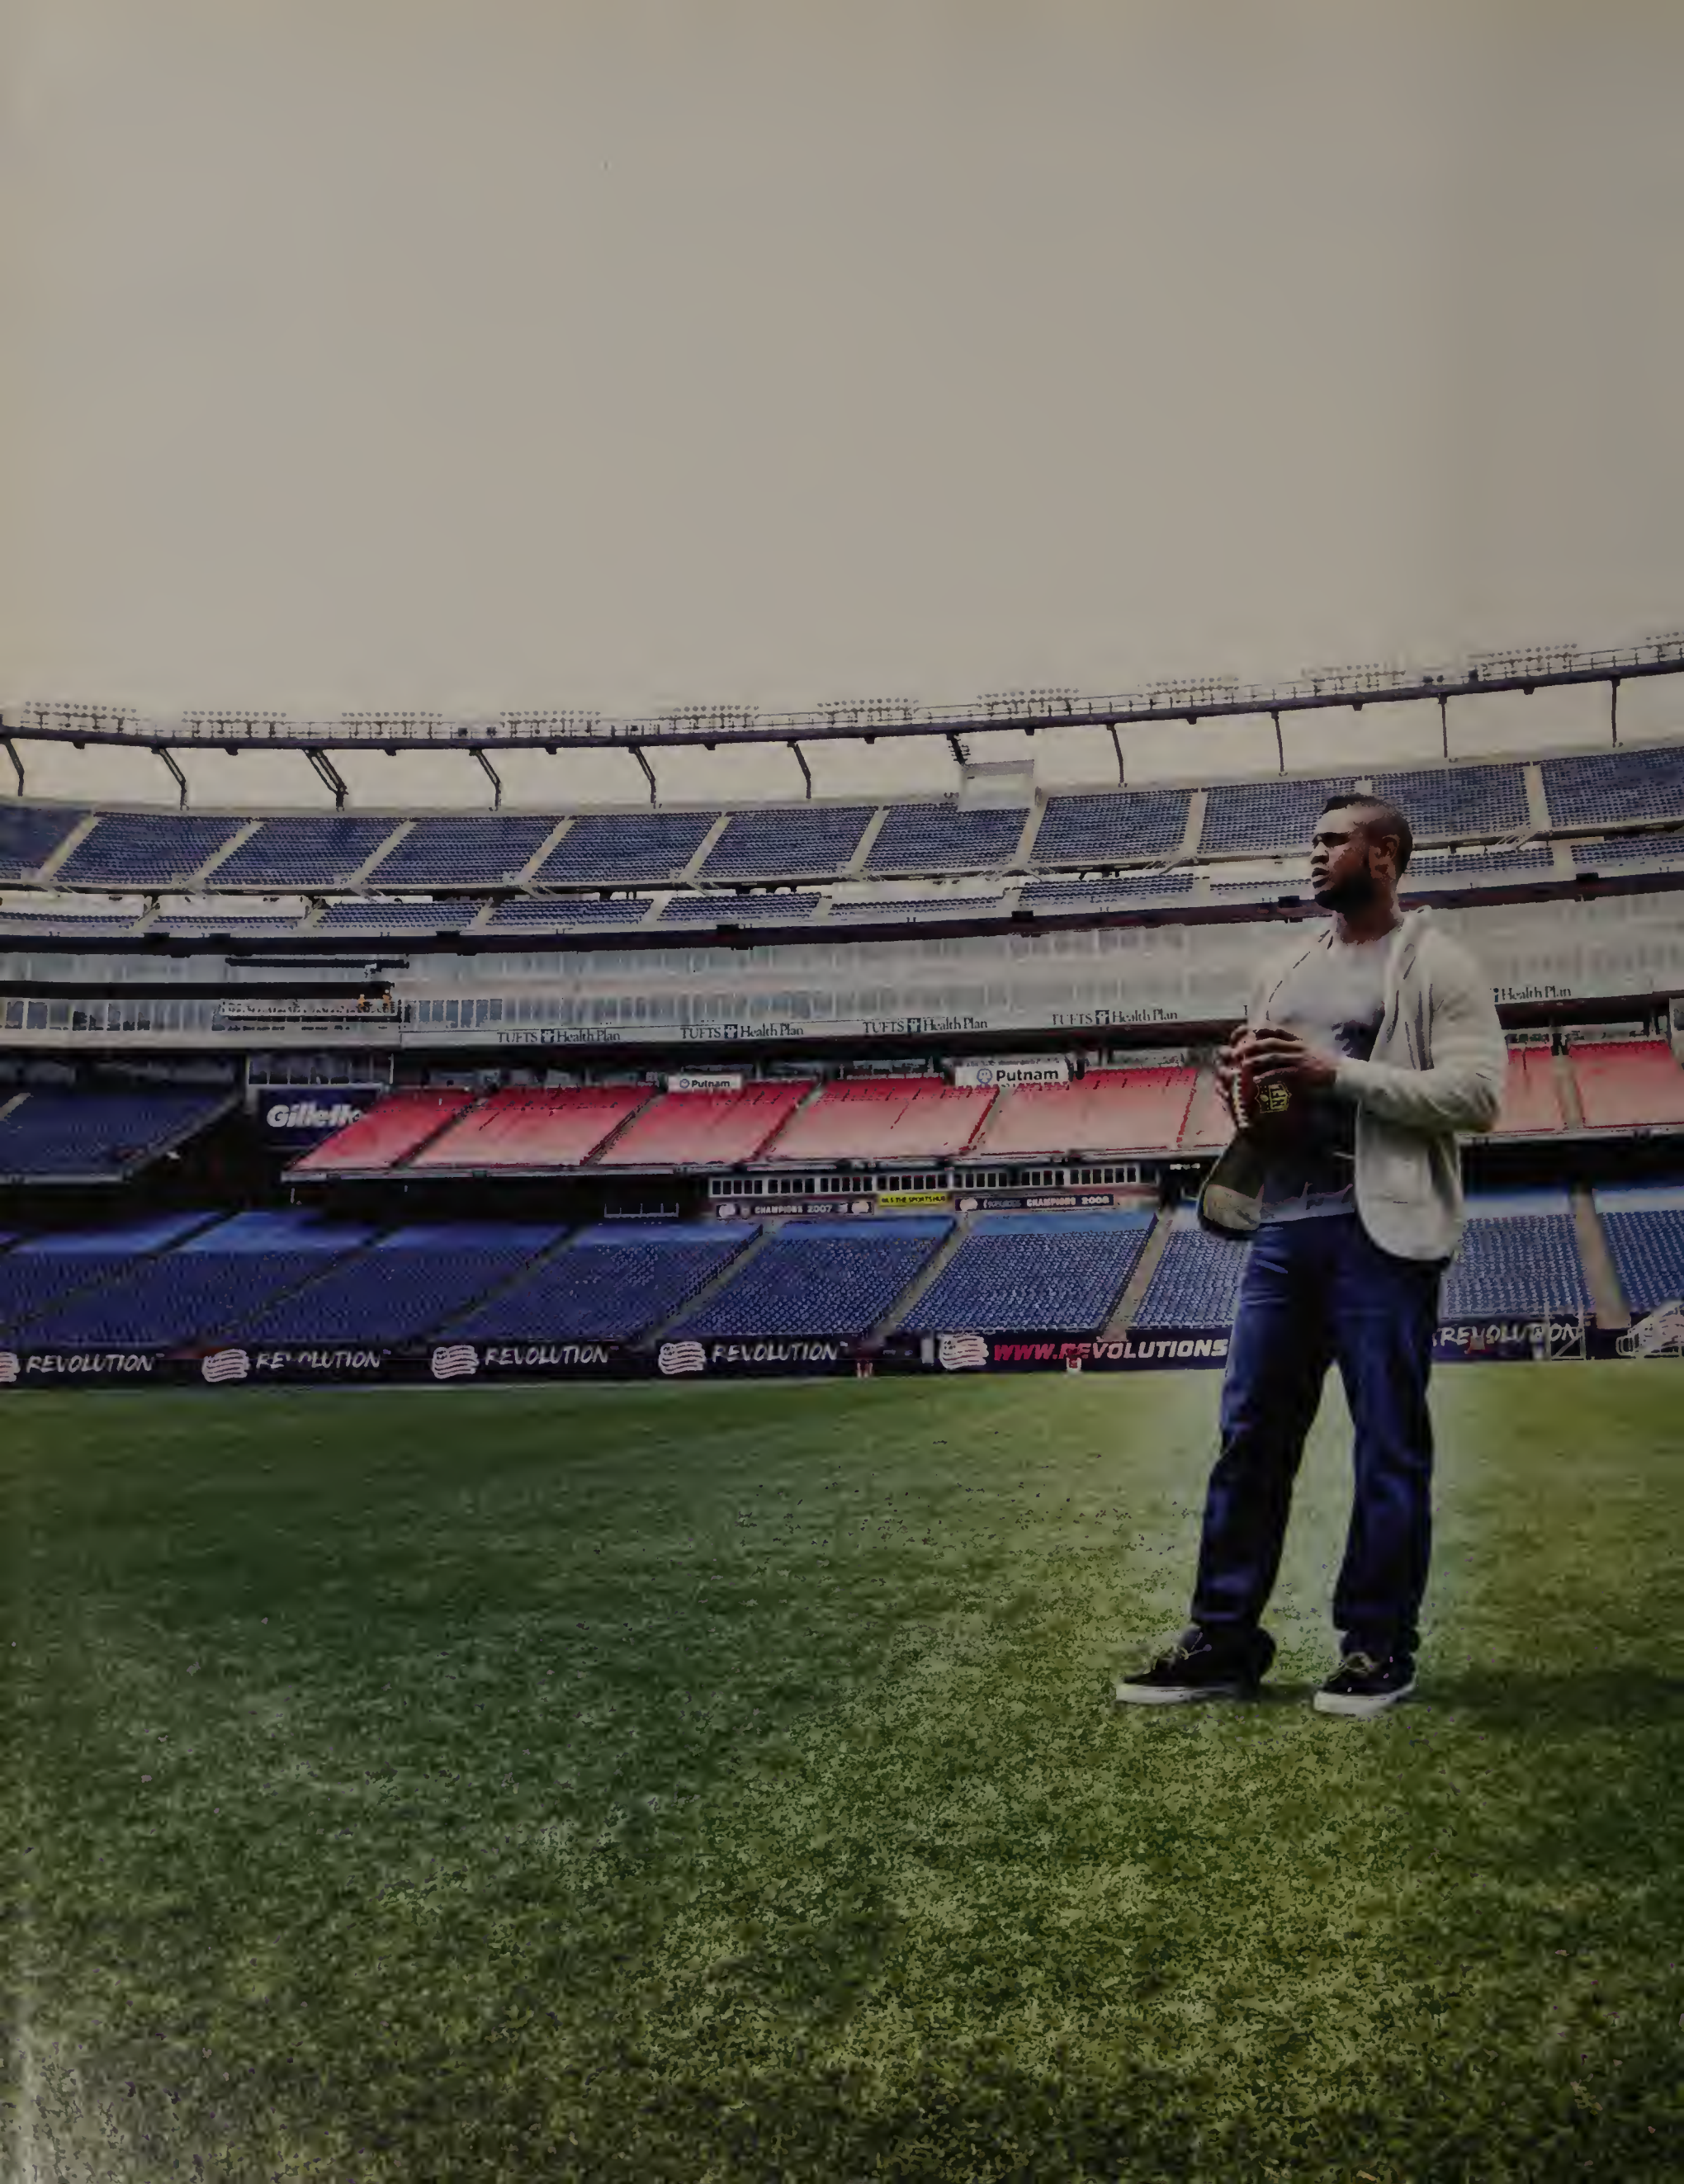
That was filmed in New Zealand?
Yes, it was right after Bruce died, and it was a wonderful cathartic and healing experience for both of us. Gwyneth was so, so spectacular in that role. And New Zealand was beautiful. An awful lot of sheep. My driver there had been a shepherd, and I learned much more than I ever wanted to know about sheep doing that film.

All of your siblings are also in the arts in one way or another. Is it in the genes?
My parents were both beautiful singers. They met at the Philadelphia Choral Arts Society, and they just bedazzled us. They were both beautiful and talented. During the Depression, my dad was known as the singing banker of Philadelphia. So, yes, I guess it is.

What was Peter Falk like on Columbo?
He was a tremendously hard worker. I remember sitting for hours and hours and hours while he went over everything with a fine-tooth comb. I was pregnant with Gwyneth when I did that, and I remember getting an ice cream with him and John Cassavetes, who was one of his very best friends, and they were teasing me saying, "Who's the father?"

Was Sidney Lumet a tyrant?
He was wonderful, but I never felt Sidney made a great movie outside New York City. I'm sure someone would want to spit at me for saying that. I admired him for his focus. He had tremendous energy.

How is Robert De Niro as a husband?
Rob is the most relaxed, laid-back guy. You just can't ruffle his feathers. He's got this confidence, which is part of what makes him such a great actor.



For a shiksa, you've played a lot of Jewish characters. What do you attribute that to?
I had a German grandmother who lived with us, and we spoke some German in the house, so Yiddish isn't all that foreign to me. My husband, who was Jewish, used to say that my mother was more of a Jewish mother than his.

Is Ben Stiller as sexy in person as he is on film?
Yes! I've known Ben since he was a little boy. Anne [Meara] and Jerry [Stiller] are friends, so to see him evolve into this amazing talent is just great. It's unusual for someone so funny to be so handsome. And such a smart guy.

Actor you most like working with?
I'll go anywhere to work with Chris Walken. He's outrageous and attentive, and I've never seen that combination in another actor. He's a real company person. Hilarious. He's never left me out there, hanging on a limb.

So is Zac Efron dreamy?
He's a sweetheart. A really nice kid. And a good actor. Together, he and Taylor Schilling are sort of my new children. ✖✖✖

The Pats sprint forward with running back Stevan Ridley.

PHOTOGRAPHED BY Kerry Brett

NFL
Wilson

Being the lead running back in a Tom Brady-led offense is the NFL equivalent of entering the witness protection program. Even though he's now well into his 30s, Brady remains the face of the franchise, and his star wattage overshadows just about any offensive player who might hitch himself to the Patriots' wagon.

Running back Stevan Ridley aims to break those stereotypes. The LSU product, entering his third season with the Patriots, emerged as a breakout star on offense last season, finishing with 1,263 rushing yards (seventh in the league) and coming within 10 carries of being the first New England running back to hit the 300-carry plateau since Corey Dillon did it back in 2004.

Known as a dynamic runner, the 5-foot-11 220-pounder combines elusiveness and power, and in his relatively short NFL career, he's enjoyed an almost unprecedented run of success in the New England offense. The only back in Patriots history who had a better season than Ridley before the age of 24 was future Hall of Famer Curtis Martin (1,487 yards in 1995 at the age of 22).

Of course, you can't approach Ridley with the same preconceived ideas you have about most running backs. The first sign you're dealing with an individual comes with his sense of style. In 2012, he introduced the Patriots' locker room to the onesie, and posted a picture on Facebook of the entire running back crew rocking the unusual fashion choice. In January, he took it a step beyond that when he showed up in the locker room in his personalized blue onesie and gold-studded backpack.

On a team in which fashions swing between extremes—hunting boots and barn jackets for offensive linemen, throwback Zubaz for Rob Gronkowski, the finest European designer duds for Brady—Ridley makes a unique statement. He says he draws on his Southern "country boy" roots for inspiration.

"I'm not really worried about what the next man says or what anybody says—I just go with what I like," Ridley says. "I think that's something that's always been a part of me. I'm comfortable being myself and the way my mom raised me. Just go out there and be who you are. And as long as you're confident with yourself, that's all you have to worry about."

His philosophy can be summed up thusly: As long as it's OK with his mother, Carolyn, it's OK with him.

"She's a Christian lady and she raised me in the church," he says with a grin. "As long as God is the head of my life, I'm good. I'm not worried about what anyone else says who is walking the earth."

Ridley, who was born in Mississippi, spent his formative years in the South and admits it took some time to get used to New England winters. With help from his family and teammates (including next-door neighbor and fellow running back Shane Vereen), he's started to settle in, finally adjusting to the snow and wintry conditions. Maybe it's the rainbow moon boots he was seen sporting late last season: In a locker room where UGGs are pretty much par for the course (thanks to the quarterback, who routinely provides complimentary pairs for his teammates), Ridley again stands out.

"I just have fun with it, man," he says. "If I think it's cool or if it's off the wall, then most likely, I'll probably have it on. To me, it's just living life."

Like most 24-year-olds with fame and fortune, Ridley likes to have fun. Apart from his adventures in couture, he's an enthusiast of interacting with fans via Twitter. But he's also well aware of the job at hand. Entering this season, Ridley's challenges include one that would separate him from every other back who played for Bill Belichick: In his 18 years as a head coach in the NFL (13 with the Patriots and five with the Browns), Belichick has had some truly elite running backs, like Dillon, but he's never had a running back finish with at least 1,000 rushing yards in back-to-back seasons. After his 1,263 yards in 2012, Ridley has a chance to be the first. It's something he's ruminated on over the course of the offseason.

"As long as God is the head of my life, I'm good."

"Going to back-to-back 1,000-yard seasons was actually a goal I set for myself at the beginning of the year," he says. "It's something I'm going to come in here and work hard to be. [Belichick is] one of the great all-time coaches, and I'm honored to be playing for him. It's something I'd like to do, to set a goal of my own, but also for the team. And then, for him as well."

Ridley seems modest. "I haven't said anything to [Belichick about the stat], out of respect for the kind of coach that he is. He'd rather me just come out here and do it instead of talking about it… and then it not happening. So I'm just going to come out here and work hard every day and try and put myself in a position to go out there and execute and get a good number for the team."

He should have even more opportunities this year, as the New England offense underwent an extreme makeover during the offseason: Four of the top five pass catchers from 2012 (Wes Welker, Brandon Lloyd, Aaron Hernandez and Danny Woodhead) are gone, and the fifth (Rob Gronkowski) will likely open the season on the sidelines because of offseason surgeries on his back and forearm.

That will mean more work for Ridley and the rest of the backs, particularly right out of the gate. Three of the first six teams the Patriots face this year include some of the worst run-defenses in the league from last season. So, while they wait for Gronkowski to return and all of the rest of the disparate parts of the passing game to come together, New England could open in a run-heavy set the likes of which we haven't seen since Dillon and the Patriots ground out wins on a regular basis in 2004.

"We really just come out here and do our job," Ridley says. "There's going to be a spotlight on Brady. But our deal is this: If we can go out there as a unit and we can get defenses something else they have to respect, it takes pressure off Brady to be the quarterback that he is. It's hard to execute when you have 11 people zoning in on you on the field. So it's just our job to go out there, as Coach says, and do our job. Be productive on the ground, through the air and picking up blockers and blitzers as well."

Practicality is the expected mantra from a Belichick player, and Ridley is no exception. "If it's playing in the shadows, then so be it. We're just going to get it done on the ground and do whatever this team needs us to do."

It hasn't all been moon boots and rushing milestones. Ridley has had his fair share of growing pains in the New England system: He got a late start on his rookie offseason because of the 2011 lockout, and ended up sitting and biding time behind starter Ben-Jarvus Green-Ellis for much of the year. As a backup, he had issues with ball security, and didn't play in the Super Bowl that season. More fumble problems popped up when he assumed the starting role last year, including one in the AFC title game against the Ravens after a nasty helmet-to-helmet collision with Baltimore safety Bernard Pollard.

So he counts improved ball security among his goals for 2013. "Every year, you have to improve. If you're not improving, you're falling behind," he says. "I follow the people in front of me, our coaching staff and my QB. So I follow the leaders I have, and if I can follow in their way, I'll be all right."

Humble words, but Ridley now stands poised to lead the crew of backs. This includes his neighbor Shane Vereen (who will likely be asked to do many of the things that Woodhead did the last couple of years) and youngster Brandon Bolden, along with veteran additions Leon Washington and LeGarrette Blount.

> "Every year you have to improve."

"I think in the running back room, we know we have a lot more experience now," he says. "We're a year older. Not to say we've made it or we're close to where we need to be yet, but with the experience comes confidence."

It's confidence backed up by Ridley's emphasis on that most Patriot of virtues. On the factor that won the team its championships. On what makes them great. On teamwork.

Despite being such a classic individualist, Ridley sums it up this way: "We rely on each other." ×××

WELCOME

To the all-knowing Improper 2013 Patriots preview! Now, before we reveal the future, let us immediately issue a disclaimer concerning the twin problems faced by preseason pigskin prognosticators. First of all, it's August and this is football. It's hard to know what's going to happen Week 1, let alone January and beyond. So take any specific predictions with a grain of salt. If we say that Tim Tebow will throw 15 touchdowns in late-game blowouts after discovering that he's actually right-handed, that's just a likelihood. A 90 percent likelihood, but still. Second, not all NFL teams are necessarily very interesting. Take the Patriots. We mean, this is frankly a pretty dull team. What's to talk about? Other than our best receiver going to a hated rival, and Tim Tebow joining the team, and the president of Russia stealing the team owner's Super Bowl ring. And we feel like there was some kind of news concerning one of our tight ends. Oh, right—Gronkowski's hurt. Thank goodness he's only half of the Patriots' vaunted tight end tandem. The other, of course, being Michael Hoomanawanui.

So with that, let's start answering some questions. We don't recommend that you use this wisdom to wager in Vegas, but if you do, it would be nice if you gave us a cut. Thanks.

Is Danny Amendola the new Wes Welker?

The first question, actually, is whether Wes Welker will continue to play like Wes Welker, or if his success was at least partially a function of his status as Tom Brady's favorite target.

We've tested the theory that Brady can throw to anyone, and the Reche Caldwell experiment confirmed that even our deified quarterback needs some quality hands on the other end of his passes. But Welker's role—run tons of short outs and get leveled going over the middle—is easier to recast than a Randy Moss-style long-bomb freak. Amendola averaged 10.6 yards per catch last year for the Rams, while Welker averaged 11.5. So it's easy to envision Amendola's numbers becoming more Welker-like now that he's part of the Patriots offense.

And besides, if Amendola doesn't work out, we've still got Edelman to step up as the go-to short-route white guy.

Tight end. Let's talk about it.

That's not a question, but OK. Last year, Rob Gronkowski and Aaron Hernandez were such a devastating threat that either one of them would've qualified as an elite receiver on any other team.

So we probably could've afforded to lose one of them. But with Gronk on the physically-unable-to-perform list and Hernandez physically unable to leave the Bristol County House of Correction, the 2013 offense becomes much less versatile than the 2012 version. No longer will Brady have a pair of sure-handed giants to target on second-and-goal from the 8-yard line. But hey, this is August. For all we know, Michael Hoomanawanui is the Brady to Hernandez's Bledsoe, if Bledsoe had lost his starting job because of a murder charge.

What about Tim Tebow at tight end?

It's not happening. Look, some guys moonlight in different positions, but putting Tebow at tight end would be like sending Jose Canseco in to pitch. Remember that?

It did not work out so well. Besides, have you seen the Patriots' playbook? Us neither. But it probably requires a Ph.D. in football-ology to comprehend, and Professor Belichick will be dropping pop quizzes all fall. So forget Tebow at TE.

Got any crazy predictions about running backs?

Of course. LeGarrette Blount will have the most rushing TDs.

This is a guy who rushed for more than 1,000 yards as a rookie in 2010. This is a guy who notched a 164-yard game against Seattle. This is a guy who had a totally mediocre year in 2012. But there's an easy explanation for that: Doug Martin, job-stealer. Well, Doug Martin and injuries. Nonetheless, Blount looks like the kind of high-value sneaky pickup that the Patriots are famous for, and we think he'll be getting most of the goal-line carries. Mark our words—2013 is the return of the Blount. And also, to a lesser degree, the return of Leon Washington.

Which trio of new receivers can we refer to as "The Law Firm"?

Call Thompkins, Dobson and Boyce.

They'll handle all your deep routes, plus real-estate closings and personal-injury claims.

What's the biggest problem area this year? Receivers?

No way. It's the defense.

Call it the Curse of Asante Samuel, but if you got the impression that the 2012 Patriots couldn't stop anyone, you were correct. Last year's team ranked 29th in the league in passing yards allowed and 25th in completions allowed. To boil that down: The Pats' D got burned, severely and often. The strategy these past two years seems to involve drafting and acquiring a bunch of young new guys and hoping that some of them exhibit that old Belichick magic—third-round cornerback Logan Ryan, for instance. The Patriots also have the benefit of last year's midseason acquisition, Aqib Talib, who can cover anyone and looks just like J.B. Smoove from Curb Your Enthusiasm.

Overall, are we looking at the playoffs? Deep playoffs? Super Bowl?

Plus, the Patriots' best years seem to come when they have an element of surprise on their side. And this year, the sheer uncertainty surrounding so many positions means that the team's opponents won't know for which version of the Patriots to plan. Is it the pass-heavy offense of 2007 and 2012 or the well-balanced ground attack of the 2004 Super Bowl team, when Corey Dillon ran for more than 1,600 yards? Will there be a new version of the two-headed tight end monster? And will a revamped D mean that Tom Brady spends more time on the field? We'll have a better idea by, say, November.

In the meantime, try not to join the mass hysteria that will inevitably erupt throughout New England if the Patriots lose one of their first three games. If we've learned anything over the past decade or so, it's that Belichick teams are not built to dominate in September. So don't sweat those losses—chill out, rake some leaves, watch the Sox. Remember that we've still got Brady. We've still got Belichick. And when the weather's cold and the holidays are over, we'll still have some football to watch.

The Wonderful Witches of Oz

Good vs. Wicked

Dorothy's adventure in the land of Oz was only half the story. A musical prequel to the L. Frank Baum classic, Wicked tells the backstory of the witches Elphaba, a snarky, misunderstood girl, and Galinda, who's pretty and popular. After a rocky start as college roommates, they become friends, although each follows her own yellow brick road in life. Elphaba's eventual fall from grace earns her the name of Wicked Witch of the West, while Galinda becomes Glinda the Good Witch of the North—but the truth isn't so simple. Watch the woman behind the broom at the Boston Opera House through Sept. 15.

Movies Edited by Hannah Sheinberg

Play with Fire

Imagine an alternate universe where people buy a ticket to forget about their nine-to-five jobs and build a community in which societal norms—like laws and showering—are a thing of the past. That's precisely what happens for a week each year in the Nevada desert, where thousands of people congregate to build a temporary city that celebrates art and unrestricted freedom of expression. Spark: A Burning Man Story captures the triumphs and challenges of the ritual that brings together hippies and hipsters, artists and partiers, the nude and the crazily costumed. Sparks will fly Aug 23-26 at the Brattle Theatre.

Reviews by Sean Burns

2 Guns ★★★ ½ Probably the most purely enjoyable of this summer's popcorn pictures, this hilarious south-of-the-border caper is a showcase for star wattage, with Denzel Washington as an undercover DEA agent working with Mark Wahlberg's naval intelligence officer to take down a Mexican drug cartel run by the always awesome Edward James Olmos. The only catch is that neither knows the other's secret, at least not before they accidentally rip off $42 million in cash from a secret CIA black-ops slush fund. Double crosses and betrayals abound, with a sadistic government assassin (Bill Paxton) leaving a pile of bodies behind him on their trail. Packed with loving references to the scummy '70s cinema of Sam Peckinpah and Don Siegel, 2 Guns capitalizes on chemistry. Denzel's unflappable, smooth-talking jive makes a marvelous match for Wahlberg's bull-in-a-china-shop belligerence. Director Baltasar Kormakur has an expert eye for action sequences, but the real pleasure of 2 Guns is just watching the two leads blabbering at each other. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

20 Feet From Stardom ★★★★ You sing along with them on the radio all the time, but I bet you've never even heard of these ladies. Morgan Neville's jubilant, long-overdue documentary moves the spotlight from center stage to the unheralded backup singers who have anonymously contributed to our pop-culture consciousness for the past 50-odd years. Darlene Love, whose voice defined Phil Spector's Wall of Sound, was taken advantage of by Spector's shockingly petty (and seemingly criminal) attempts to deny her recognition. Watch out for Merry Clayton, who showed up in a bathrobe with rollers in her hair in the middle of the night to wail on "Gimme Shelter" when the Stones were stuck in a rut. (The shot of Mick Jagger listening to her isolated vocal track is alone worth the price of admission.) Their stories are sad, as showbiz tales often are. But this funny, raucous party of a movie is a celebration, not just of wonderful music but of finally giving credit where it's due. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and West Newton.)

Crystal Fairy ★★★ It is the summer of coked-up Michael Cera. The former whimpering man-child tops his outrageous cameo in This Is the End with another druggy subversion in this Sundance oddity from writer-director Sebastian Silva. Cera stars as an American visiting Chile, hell-bent on locating the legendary San Pedro cactus, which is supposed to have hallucinogenic properties. In the company of three eye-rolling locals (played by the filmmaker's brothers), Cera cluelessly and boorishly insults pretty much everybody unfortunate enough to make his acquaintance. It's one of the most super-heroically annoying performances I have ever seen. The prissy little brat meets his match in the title character, a hippy-dippy fellow American wanderer played by Gaby Hoffman. She's always guilelessly carrying on about spirit rocks and meditative chants, walking around naked and oblivious to her host's derision. The meandering movie eventually finds its way to the desert, where one stunner of a monologue by Hoffman sends this slight stoner comedy into deeper, more disturbing waters. (At Kendall Square.)

Fruitvale Station ★★★★ The shooting of unarmed 22-year-old Oscar Grant in the back by a Bay Area Rapid Transit police officer was a case that galvanized the public, with unnerving similarities to the recent George Zimmerman verdict. But this extraordinary debut film from writer-director Ryan Coogler leaves all that in the future, dialing back a day for a low-key, humanist portrait of the last 24 hours of Grant's life. It's a gentle film, with deep reservoirs of empathy and understanding. Fruitvale Station has a loose, hang-out vibe, following Grant around this Oakland community. Coogler is roughly the same age and from the Bay Area, which is probably why every detail in the picture feels so lived-in—and so right. Played in a brilliant, star-making turn by Michael B. Jordan, Grant's no angel, nor is he a martyr. It's a glimpse of one day in one life. Maybe it wasn't a remarkable life. But it was a life all the same, stupidly and tragically snuffed out. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

The Great Gatsby ★★ Australian dynamo and short-attention-span enthusiast Baz Luhrmann never found anything he couldn't turn tacky. So after the Hawaiian-shirt-clad hash he made out of Romeo + Juliet and the pillaging of 30 years of pop culture via massacred song snippets in Moulin Rouge comes his bizarre take on The Great Gatsby. It's a long, chintzy 3-D muddle based on a book that's not particularly suited to movies, but Leonardo DiCaprio happens to be amazing. The 1920s Jazz Age is scored to Jay-Z. Every party in the Hamptons looks like a live MTV report from Spring Break, all bumping and grinding, and the anachronisms clang like a broken church bell. But DiCaprio works wonders in a movie that's otherwise distracted by small, shiny objects. He's hooked on affectations, a millionaire pretender to the throne who came from nothing and thus always seems to be sinking in quicksand when confronted with high society's betters. This is a great performance. Too bad everything else about the film is rather awful. (At West Newton.)

The Heat ★★ ½ Set the DeLorean for 1986, and you just might have a grand old time with The Heat, a lo-fi buddy-cop comedy that tweaks the time-honored formula ever so slightly by replacing Mel Gibson and Danny Glover with Melissa McCarthy and Sandra Bullock. For the first half-hour or so, I thought it was gearing up to be one of the worst movies I have ever seen, but eventually it grew on me. It's easy to forget what a gifted comedian Bullock can be, but she's a real treat here, clomping around, condescending to everybody. It's only through prolonged exposure to McCarthy's foul-mouthed, usually hammered detective that we begin to see cracks in the facade. Bullock puts up an anal-retentive front, but deep down she can't wait to start swearing and drinking at lunch. The Heat is a throwaway movie, putting a distaff spin on pictures that probably weren't all that great in the first place. But formulas become formulas for a reason: because they work. This will play forever on cable. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

ee Daniels' The Butler ★★ ½ A silly copyright dispute required the director's name to appear in the official title, which is ironic because this is the least Lee Daniels-y movie that Lee Daniels has ever made. The maverick behind Precious and last year's blisteringly sleazy The Paperboy takes it down a few notches for this Oscar-baiting tale of a gentle White House butler (Forest Whitaker) who Forrest Gumps his way through a brief history of the Civil Rights movement and several celebrity-cameo presidential administrations. The starchy screenplay by Danny Strong is often thuddingly obvious, pitting most of the conflict between Whitaker's shy retiring servant and his firebrand Black Panther son (David Oyelowo). What makes it interesting is Daniels' raw sensibility chafing against the stuffy material, with lively performances from Oprah Winfrey as a gin-swilling unfaithful wife and Cuba Gooding Jr. as a sidekick with his mind in the gutter. The bizarre cast includes John Cusack as Richard Nixon, Jane Fonda as Nancy Reagan, and most hilariously, Liev Schreiber as Lyndon Johnson. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Lone Ranger ★★ ½ Released amid a perfect storm of production delays, budgetary nightmares and celebrity schadenfreude, Gore Verbinski's oddball Western is the kind of box-office disaster that becomes a punch line for late-night talk-show monologues. Too bad, because this is one fascinating film. The weirdest summer blockbuster to come down the pike in eons, The Lone Ranger is a bitterly cynical, Sergio Leone-styled bloodbath full of fairy-tale flourishes and slapstick interludes out of a silent comedy. We begin in 1933 in an Old West museum exhibit, where Johnny Depp's Tonto is a statue come to life. He spots a little kid dressed up as the title character and starts spinning a semi-coherent, fanciful yarn about what really went down between him and Kemo Sabe. This device positions the picture as an alternative myth, a tall-tale corrective to "printing the legend." The Lone Ranger is way too violent and way too long, but also daringly subversive with some marvelous set pieces. I have no idea who this movie was made for, but I'm glad I saw it. (In the suburbs.)

Man of Steel ★★★ Brows furrowed when Dark Knight guru Christopher Nolan and Sucker Punch director Zack Snyder announced they were rebooting the saga of America's favorite illegal immigrant. I don't think anyone needs to see Kal-El conflicted with Batman's trendy neurosis. The drab color scheme and handheld photography feel like concessions to a fashionable "gritty" aesthetic, but otherwise I'm relieved to report that this is the same old Superman. Played with a wonderful, forthright decency by newcomer Henry Cavill, the Man of Tomorrow begins the film as an anonymous drifter, trying to hide his superpowers in a succession of go-nowhere jobs and dodging pesky Daily Planet reporter Lois Lane (Amy Adams). It's only when a crew of Kryptonian supervillains come threatening Armageddon that he finally busts out the cape and takes flight. The fractured flashback chronology is sometimes awkward, but Man of Steel boasts some terrific performances, particularly by Superman's two dads—Russell Crowe and Kevin Costner. The apocalyptic smackdowns suffer from CGI overload, but the movie is big-hearted and sincere. Just like its hero. (In the suburbs.)

Much Ado About Nothing ★ ½ This larky little Shakespeare adaptation, whipped up by Joss Whedon and his regular TV stock company during a 12-day break on The Avengers, is literally a home movie, filmed in Whedon's own house. Why not unwind from the stress of a massive blockbuster shoot by inviting all your old friends over to riff on the Bard's funniest play? Problem is that, even by home-movie standards, it's a terrible film, indifferently photographed on smeary, consumer-grade black-and-white digital video. Much Ado shovels mass quantities of iambic pentameter into the mouths of untrained third-string television actors, most of whom appear to have learned their lines phonetically. Not since Baz Luhrmann's Romeo + Juliet have I been so convinced that a cast had no idea what they were saying. These folks might as well be speaking Klingon. It's all buffoonish clowning around, sexy-time pantomimes and drunken dances. The barn door–sized performance by Alexis Denisof might be my new least favorite thing ever. I kept waiting for him to slip on a banana peel. (At West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Pacific Rim ★★★ ½ The beguiling thing about Guillermo del Toro's Pacific Rim is just how well thought out it all is. Yes, we're talking about that movie in which skyscraper-sized robots fend off attacks from gigantic Godzilla monsters. It's a rock 'em-sock 'em display of mass distraction, but it has obviously been brooded over and mused upon for years by del Toro and his co-screenwriter, Travis Beacham. Pacific Rim exists in a complete, fully realized universe, which is a high compliment for a movie that also feels like it was dreamed up by an 8-year-old splashing around with toys in the bathtub. Dedicated to Ray Harryhausen and Ishiro Honda, it's madly in love with all those Creature Double Feature UHF-channel staples, ushering the man-in-lizard-suit kitsch into a new age of IMAX 3-D digital filmmaking technology. Del Toro has been missing from movies for five years, but he's back with a vengeance here, and his imagination clearly knows no bounds. There's a childlike glee to Pacific Rim. It's dumb fun done smart. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Personal Politics

This Is the End ★★ ½ One time there was this great party at James Franco's house that got ruined by the rapture. Or at least that's the idea of this wildly self-indulgent, occasionally hilarious shambles from writer/directors Seth Rogen and Evan Goldberg. A sprawling cast of Hollywood's most self-deprecating comics star as themselves, with Jay Baruchel visiting from Canada and not so secretly resenting childhood buddy Rogen's douchey new movie star pals. Playing comically exaggerated versions of their offscreen personas, Rogen's the affable pothead, Franco's a pompous pseudo-intellectual, and Jonah Hill oozes passive-aggressive smarm. And then the world ends. It's the same cheerfully vulgar bromance dynamic you'd expect from the writers of Superbad, with an added element of the apocalypse. The best jokes here revolve around just how pampered and useless actors are in a crisis, while looters and natural disasters are no match for the destructive power of Danny McBride. Too heavy on the improvisation and at least half an hour too long, This Is the End is also often quite terribly funny. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The To Do List ★★ ½ Written and directed by comedian Maggie Carey, this semi-autobiographical coming-of-age story stars Aubrey Plaza as a classroom know-it-all goody-two-shoes who handles sex the same way she aced AP chemistry. She makes a list of every naughty activity she has yet to try, and sets about clinically crossing off items with a comical collection of shocked and awkward teenage boys. The To Do List is nothing if not brutally frank about just how unsatisfying early sexual experiences can be, especially when divorced from affection. There are many laughs mined from Plaza's all-business efficiency in treating erotic encounters like homework assignments, and the dumbstruck faces of horndog dudes who can't believe their luck. She learns the hard way why so many of these things are known by slang terms that end with the word "job." They're work. Carey goes a bit too often for the easy gross-out, but despite the childish sight gags, what salvages the movie is a refreshingly adult attitude toward the messy matter of sexuality. (At Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Wolverine ★★ ½ Few films fall apart as spectacularly in their third act as this second attempt to give Hugh Jackman's knuckle-knived berserker a stand-alone franchise apart from his mutant X-Men pals. This time around he's on the run through the Far East, protecting an heiress (Tao Okamoto) marked for death by the Yakuza, various ninjas and a few rotten relatives. What makes The Wolverine so refreshing for so long is its smallness of scale. There's no apocalyptic CGI grandeur, just a lot of close-quartered fights full of sharp, pointy objects. Journeyman director James Mangold hews to clean compositions, clearly defined action geography and striking use of the Japanese locations. It's tightly focused, even intimate by comic book standards. Until all of a sudden, it isn't anymore. The film's final segment retreats to a generic industrial space for a cacophony of preposterous plot twists and weightless computer-generated destruction, complete with the now obligatory midcredits teaser for the next installment. Such a shame, as this was almost a real movie. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

World War Z ★★ ½ After all the troubled production rumors, delayed release dates and reshoots, producer/star Brad Pitt's $200 million zombie apocalypse movie finally arrives, and I guess it's all right. Throwing out most of the Max Brooks book from which the film takes its title, World War Z gives Pitt the Tom Cruise role as humanity's last hope after a killer virus turns everybody into frothing, herky-jerky monsters. As a retired United Nations investigator inexplicably called back to work to combat this crushing epidemic, Pitt furrows his brow and gives one of his blander leading-man performances. His job seemingly is to trot around the world witnessing wild, extravagantly elaborate scenes of devastation while being smarter and more handsome than everybody else. It's an eye-popping spectacle, and weirdly remote. Only in the film's third act (notoriously taken over by an entirely different creative team) does the movie really cook, trapping key characters in an enclosed location with clearly defined goals for one corker of a white-knuckle suspense sequence. Memo to Hollywood: Less is more. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Music Edited by Sarah Hagman

Raging Hormones and Waging Wars

Don't let their fresh faces fool you: Paradise Fears isn't your average boy band. This unconventional sextet from South Dakota stormed the Midwest in 2008 after recording their debut EP, The Secret to Dropping Out. Sans management or label, the defiantly independent group has often been compared to alt-pop greats like Mayday Parade and All Time Low. Now they're touring in support of their new EP, originally titled Antebellum but renamed Battle Scars, a better fit for a release full of soulful anthems for the battered but not yet broken. Battle the crowd on Aug. 17 at Brighton Music Hall.

Power of Ten

The Sight of Music

Harmony can happen when art and music collide. Ten Paintings Ten Songs features the abstract paintings of artist Steven Bogart and the evocative soundscapes of musician Mali Sastri, vocalist/pianist in the Boston band Jaggery—not to mention a former student of Bogart's. But now they're colleagues, having shared ideas and informed each other's work over the course of a two-year collaboration. The resulting exhibit pairs Bogart's organic and otherworldly forms with sound stations playing Sastri's songs, which conjure numerous emotions, from high-pitched apprehension in "War Cry" to percussive playfulness in "Icy." Keep your eyes, ears and mind open at the Bromfield Gallery through Aug. 24.

Karaoke King

Mix It Up

A self-admitted bad singer but an avid music lover nonetheless, Rob Sheffield hits a high note with Turn Around Bright Eyes. This pop-culture-obsessed Rolling Stone columnist discovered his passion for karaoke as a widower in his mid-30s, and it completely changed his tune. Where his first memoir, Love Is a Mix Tape, left readers in a melancholy state of mind, Turn Around Bright Eyes offers something a little more upbeat. It inspires hope in the form of two new serious relationships: one with a woman and the other with the Sing Sing karaoke bar. Meet the music man at Brookline Booksmith for a night of karaoke and conversation on Aug. 17.

We salute Boston's finest restaurants and clubs

Enjoy Torched Sea Urchin & Scallop at Douzo.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

JOE'S AMERICAN BAR & GRILL [9 locations in the Boston greater area, visit joesamerican.com] Joe's serves classic American comfort food in a comfortable setting, making it a local favorite for lunch, dinner, weekend brunch or take-out. Everything is made in-house, from the famous clam chowder to their juicy burgers or fall-off-the bone ribs. With carved wood, stained glass and vintage lighting, Joe's is reminiscent of your favorite New England watering hole. Try the bloody mary or one of their local beers on tap.

JOSE MCINTYRE'S [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Jose McIntyre's is located across from the Aquarium on Milk Street. This is Boston's only Mexican-Irish restaurant and bar. For close to two decades Jose's has been an institution with the after work and late night party crowds. If the Dos Equis man is the world's most interesting man, Jose McIntyre is the world's most entertaining. Come experience the most unique venue in Boston. With 5 rooms, 3 bars, 2 floors and a game room; José is the perfect place to unwind with co-workers or host a celebration.

RESTAURANTS

ABE & LOUIE'S [793 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-536-6300, abeandlouies.com] Abe & Louie's is the quintessential American steakhouse, serving prime cuts of corn fed, Midwestern beef, fresh seafood and garden produce. Steaks are aged on the bone for six weeks to ensure maximum flavor. Signature dishes include the bone-in filet mignon, NY sirloin and swordfish chop. With its high quality food, outstanding service and classic interiors, this award-winning restaurant has consistently remained a Boston favorite since its debut in 1998.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

DOUZO MODERN JAPANESE RESTAURANT & LOUNGE [131 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-859-8886.] Douzo is a Modern Japanese Restaurant and Lounge located in Boston's Back Bay/South End neighborhood. A beautiful and modern decor to complement a wide range of traditional and innovative menu items. Serving only the freshest and highest quality ingredients available for the best taste. Valet parking is available Wednesday through Saturday and validated parking for the adjoining parking garage after 5pm. Take-out and delivery offered daily as well with pre-packed sushi Monday through Sunday.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $.Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

SAMBA STEAK & SUSHI HOUSE [1138 Worcester Rd. (Rt 9E) Framingham, MA 01702, 508-628-0288] Samba Steak and Sushi House is MetroWest's hidden gem and the perfect place to host your company holiday party. Our private function room seats 20 - 100 people and is ideal for either an intimate gathering or a festive fete. Samba will customize a package suited specifically for your tastes, including a variety of entertainment options. Call 508-628-0288 to discuss your holiday plans.

Boston's finest restaurants and clubs

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

BARS & CLUBS

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 DARTMOUTH STREET, BOSTON, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

COMMON GROUND

Worth Its Pounds in Sterling

It's not often that people get starstruck before the play even starts, but that was the case at opening night of Commonwealth Shakespeare Company's Shakespeare on the Common.

They kicked it off right, with a pre-performance reception at the city-owned Parkman House, where guests could gush over two famous couples—Chris and Marianne Leone Cooper and Tony Shalhoub and Brooke Adams. As one person put it: "I'm in the same room as Monk and the hard-ass Marine dad from American Beauty. I'm about to wet myself."

The Oscar winner and the three-time Emmy winner, and their equally accomplished spouses, dazzled the crowd, who sipped wine and nibbled at a light buffet. Among them: director Steve Maler, leading man Peter Cambor, the American Repertory Theater's Kati Mitchell, culinary sexbomb Matthew Pidge, tall drink of water Kurt Gress and his handsome other half, Sam Parkinson, the aptly named Dennis Hong with Arkansas' finest export, Rob Hagan, the bubbly blonde Kelly Boullet, investment guru Kier McDonough, his art dealer wife, Anja Kola, Channel 7 force of nature Janet Wu, quister mush William Grote, blond bombshell Joanne Bell and Hizzonah Tom Menino.

After crossing Beacon Street and onto the Common, everyone took their seats for an uncommonly excellent production of The Two Gentlemen of Verona. Cleverly inspired by '50s Las Vegas, it featured showgirls, a jazz quartet and an incredibly talented dog named Peter Gallagher (Shakespeare purists be damned).

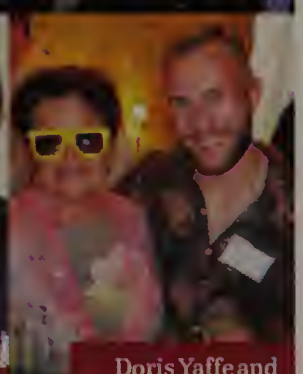
Following the play, a raucous afterparty took place at Back Deck, where everyone got to meet the cast and toast 18 years of excellence.

The evening's funniest exchange: "I've paid 200 bucks to see a production in London that wasn't half as good," to which someone responded, "Well, in London, 200 bucks is as close as things get to being free."

Vive La Republique!

The French are a curious lot. They love to flaunt their hoity-toity aristocratic past, but as soon as July 14th rolls around, they all raise a glass of Champagne to the day they started lopping heads off the aristocrats.

Any excuse to drink Champagne is fine by us, though, especially when it's the French Cultural Center's annual Bastille Day block party, which turns Marlborough Street into a red, white and blue sea of liberté, égalité and fraternité.



On hand for the festivities were such notables as Beacon Hillions Suki and Miguel de Braganca with two of their sparkling offspring, Miguel and Camilla, World Music head honcho Maure Aronson, video game designer Trevor Stricker and the lovely Luba, French consul general Fabien Fiesehi and the stunning Yuki, Swiss consul general Felix Moesner, Greek tycoon Stamatis Astra, Haitian hipster Jean-Mare Nelson, the amazingly named Gonzague de Montriehard and his Boston-bred bride, Elizabeth, jeweler to the rich and famous Gerard Riveron, Janet (also known as Prineess Zhanay) Goff, wildly talented painter Aurélie Galois, and scads of other francophiles, francophones and actual French folk.

The block party had everything from fine food to face painting, and the bands—Afro-jazz-rock outfit Atlas Soul and Quebecoise country act Madame Moustaehe—had everyone (literally) dancing in the streets.

Although someone did suggest storming the Nashua Street Jail, cooler heads prevailed. Meanwhile, the evening's best exchange was this:

"I apologize I haven't gotten back to you. I've been in cloud cuckoo land."

"You should've stayed there. Reality sucks."

When Islands Collide

So what were two dyed-in-the-diapers Vineyard kids like Sally Taylor (the equally talented daughter of JT and Carly Simon) and husband Dean Bragonier doing on Nantucket?

Hosting a benefit for the nonprofit he runs, Partners for Youth With Disabilities, at the Summer House in Sconset. Swathed in fog, Taylor performed a set with her Colorado cronies, Something Underground, while guests lounged in lawn chairs, sipping cocktails.

Among the prominent Gray Lady faces: car czar George Albreeht with blond bombshell Snobella Snobaholie, the brother-sister duo of Arthur Arbetter and Joan Rosenberg, unfairly perfect pair Liz and Peter Georgantas, island royalty Mark and Joyee Goldweitz, wonder woman Danielle Debenedietis, banking bigwig Cary Lyneh, the dashing Dominiek Doyle and any number of billionaires indistinguishable in the mist.

After the concert, everyone repaired to the restaurant for more merriment, but the evening's best line came during the auction, when someone had bid $5,000 for Taylor to play a private concert in their home.

"Make it $10,000!" someone shouted. "After all, this is Nantucket." ×××

EVOLUTION ROCKS

WHEN I'M HAVING ONE OF my ruminative jags, I like to amble through the Harvard Museum of Natural History, soaking in the odor of mothballs. Passing through the packs of schoolkids and overexcited taxidermists, I pay my respects to Tiktaalik roseae—the 375-million-year-old fish that, in a fit of zeal, first flopped onto dry land. Then it's on to the giant ground sloth, the glyptodont, the lamented Great Auk. You can spot a fleck of wisdom in the beady marble eyes of the stuffed dodo (it's a fake, but still). He looks as if he means to say, "Tell them, friend, that we, too, once bestrode the earth with our comical, waddling feet. We should have learned to fly. Quack." Evolution, you've got to admit, is the grandest poetry.

In the 542-odd issues of The Improper to date, we've never used the Centrale Sans font. Until now.

This issue doesn't mark a change in the magazine's innards, just some long-overdue cosmetic surgery. Apart from lifting the sag in our buttocks (i.e. event listings), we got a chin tuck (this page) and a really spectacular boob job (the Imperatives section). The man behind this overhaul is design director Joe Heroun, veteran of a thousand magazine face-lifts and an esteemed colleague through three decades in the business. What follows is a triumph of newfound white space and modernized fonts. Reinvention is the key to life.

Another lively aspect to this issue is Lydia Santangelo's fall fashion feature, accessorized by a gigantic hot air balloon. Upward.

For a classically trained artist, the face is just another canvas. Makeup artist and db cosmetics founder Mariolga Pantazopoulos studied painting at Pratt Institute, but has been in the makeup biz for almost 13 years and has worked her magic for Boston Fashion Week since 2011. What's different this season is that many of these looks can translate off the runway. Pantazopoulos gives us three colorful ideas for fall. / Rima Butto

Sheer wash of color

Using a fluffy brush, sweep a pumpkin shadow over your lids. Add a couple coats of mascara and skip eyeliner for a romantic effect that Pantazopoulos calls a veil. Try db cosmetics enhance.eye in bronze for controlled, long-lasting pigment.

Iridescent nail polish

Pantazopoulos favors metallic, shimmery nail colors that "almost pick up the shade nearest to it." Essie's Repstyle is a shape-shifting bronze magnetic polish that reflects olive tones in the light.

Bold lips

A wine- or burgundy-colored lipstick gives an edgier look, but Pantazopoulos recommends keeping eyes and cheeks light when playing up the lips. Stila Stay All Day Liquid Lipstick in Fiery offers full coverage and a matte finish.

CHEFDOM

TWO NEW TOQUES TAKE THE WHEEL

ALTHOUGH HE'S BEEN RUNNING THE kitchen at Harvard Square's Russell House Tavern since April, executive chef Tom Borgia is taking his time overhauling the menu and making his presence known. Small steps, he says, are making the transition as he replaces Michael Scelfo, who left to open Alden & Harlow a few blocks away. "We changed up the burrata a little bit, made it a little bigger," Borgia says. "And it's the epitome of what we want to do: The burrata is made in Somerville, with milk from Massachusetts dairy farmers, and all the ingredients on the plate are from Massachusetts as well." You'll still find pizza on the menu. "I like strange pizzas," says the Westborough native, "and the clientele is interested in that." Case in point: braised beef tongue on toast with Taleggio and crispy fried egg.

"Seasonality is a big thing for me," says Borgia, who started his career as opening sous chef at the Federalist and more recently opened Legal Harborside as chef de cuisine, with a stop along the way as chef de cuisine at Montagna at the Little Nell in Aspen, Colo. Come fall, expect dishes such as octopus mortadella. "It's something I had in Liguria on my birthday," he explains. "Almost like a carpaccio—poached, then stuffed into a terrine with lardo and pistachios, topped with grilled tentacles."

HOUSE OF BORGIA: Russell House Tavern

Making His Mark

OVER IN THE BACK BAY, Mark Allen has been named executive chef at Towne Stove and Spirits. You may remember him from the well-regarded Le Soir Bistro he owned years ago in Newton Highlands, or from his time at the old Ritz in Boston. Most recently executive chef at the swanky Pine Brook Country Club in Weston, Allen will oversee Towne's entire culinary program and unveil a new menu in September.

CAPT. KIRKLAND: Tony Maws, inset, says Kirkland Tap & Trotter will be a neighborhood joint with dishes such as grilled chicken, above.

HOT TO TROT

CRAIGIE'S CHEF TAPS INTO GRILL LOVE

TONY MAWS HAS PUT A LOT OF THOUGHT into Kirkland Tap & Trotter. He's thought of the effect it will have on his first restaurant, Craigie on Main: "(Craigie) is my baby." He's mulled over the location, just outside Inman Square: "I spent a large part of my childhood in Somerville." He's focused on how customers can see the bar, grill and kitchen all from their seats: "You'll have different experiences depending on how close you are." And he's dreamed up the quintessential hot dog: "It'll have the same philosophy as the burger."

However Maws spells out his philosophy for Kirkland, the burger in the first week of September [illegible] despite all his thought—it's a bit [illegible] brasserie.

"It's going to have a big grill. It's going to have [illegible] I don't want to say communal. We're trying to do that thing, but it feels like [illegible]," Maws says of the open space that will have brick and exposed ceilings. "It's going to be good in the beginning, but I can't wait till it ages. At Craigie on Main, I freak out when a table gets scratched; here I can't wait for the tables to be scratched."

Maws, whose Craigie on Main is synonymous with tasting menus, white tablecloths and event dining, is going to be a guy with a grill. But he's hardly new to the setting, having worked the grill station for Chris Schlesinger and Mark Miller. The menu will have entrees primarily in the low- to mid-$20s range (there will be a burger, but it won't be the famous Craigie version). A meat or fish will be cooked one way, instead of in four different preparations as it might be at Craigie.

"It's going to sound like grilled chicken and roasted cod, but the trick is that it's impeccable in its freshness, or in the rub, or the cooking technique," Maws says.

Danny Scampoli will leave Craigie to be the chef de cuisine at Kirkland (as Carl Dooley will take the role of Craigie's first chef de cuisine), and Tyler Wang (No. 9 Park) will head up the eponymous tap portion of the restaurant. While an upscale hot dog will soon debut, Maws doesn't expect that to launch a trend.

"I hope nothing in this restaurant is trendy," he says. "If it is, then I did something very wrong."

Q&A
TAKE BY STORM

New England native Eric Fisher is the new chief meteorologist for WBZ-TV (Channel 4)

HOW MUCH PRACTICE DOES IT TAKE TO BE ABLE TO POINT TO THE RIGHT SPOT ON THE GREEN SCREEN? I feel better about the job when I watch other people try it, 'cause when you watch someone who thinks it's all really easy, they quickly realize that it's not. It takes a few years before you really have your feel down—how you act at the wall and how you gesture and how to be engaging all at the same time. And not having to think about it while you do it.

DO YOU HAVE A FAVORITE KIND OF STORM TO REPORT ON? My favorite is definitely snowstorms. Reason being, you can have a little fun with the snowstorms. Snowstorms generally are not wildly deadly, but they have the power to shut down a city. The anticipation of it, watching the first flake fall and watching the whole thing unfold in a matter of hours—I think snowstorms are just the best.

WHY IS NEW ENGLAND WEATHER ALWAYS TERRIBLE? [Laughs] See, that's the thing about weather: It's always arbitrary. So any person would have a different definition of what terrible actually is. I don't think New England weather's terrible. New England is just in a spot where you've got ocean influence. You've got the jet stream, which is almost always active in the region; you're open to heat in the summertime and humidity. It's really anything goes. I mean, if you want to forecast the weather in California, go ahead, but that's retirement. That's not interesting.

SINCE SHARKNADO TAKES PLACE IN CALIFORNIA, WHAT DO YOU THINK BOSTON'S ANIMAL STORM WOULD BE CALLED? Well, I think Sharknado in Boston would make a lot more sense than Sharknado in Southern California, 'cause we actually have sharks in Cape Cod and we actually have tornadoes, which Southern California generally does not. An animal storm in Boston—I guess it'd be a Sealstorm. People want to get rid of all those seals out of Cape Cod right now; this could tidy up the problem. / Hannah Sheinberg

Top Dog

It's one of Cambridge's great comebacks: Lizzy's, an underrated East Cambridge drinking and eating spot, shuttered suddenly during the winter, but thankfully reopened when the weather turned warm. The menu is humbler now, but the list of taps and libations is as thoughtful as ever. And the kitchen's plates are still way above average. Among them is the Chili Cheez Dawg, a snappy, slightly charred Pearl link topped with from-scratch beef-and-bean chili—a favorite of owner Josh Velazquez—and your choice of cheese (go for gouda), plus a generous pile of fries. Cambridge-area pubs: Consider the bar raised. / Elizabeth Bomze

SARI SIGHTS

Fashion startup lallitara has a true rags to stitches story. Headquartered in Cambridge, the company upcycles Indian saris into colorful clothing and accessories while seeking to do a world of good along the way. Since starting last August, CEO Bijal Shah and team members Joanna Zhuo and Elizabeth Buckle have focused on matters often overlooked by others in the industry. Their partnership with informal recycling communities offers workers fair wages, and the manufacturing happens in Massachusetts, where the would-be discarded fabric is refashioned into dresses, scarves and more. "We provide one of a kind designs," Shah, a MIT business school grad, says. "And we are not only making customers look good, but we also provide them with the opportunity to feel great about their purchase." The MassChallenge finalist has been pairing up with local designers—most recently in a jewelry collaboration with Cambridge-based Porcelain and Stone—and plans on serving up a variety of new products this fall. From the upcoming men's limited-edition bowties to a day to evening clutch, lallitara will keep you dressing. / Sarah Hagman

SECOND LIFE: Lallitara turns Indian saris into garments like scarves and tops.

COMRADES IN COMMUTE

To the people waiting with me in the morning at my T stop: Is it weird to think that we're all kind of friends? I know that we've never spoken, but there's a kind of mutual connection here, where we're all brought together by our horrible commute. I may never get to formally introduce myself, but just know that it's comforting to see you [illegible] morning.

Introverted Sue

To the Copley Square CVS: I think [illegible] sketchier CVS stores I've ever visited. I applaud you for having two floors and a vast selection of merchandise, but I feel like everyone in the store is giving another person the stink eye. Or they start talking to themselves in line.

Getting weird vibes

To those who don't understand T etiquette: Let all passengers off before trying to get on. (It's common sense to let people out of a closed space before going in.) If you are standing, take your bag or backpack off your shoulder and hold it in front of you, between your feet. That makes more room and prevents the person behind you from getting whacked in the face.

Manner police

To the Red Sox traffic: Whether it's by T or by car, you make my life very difficult. After a long day of work, the last thing I want to do is be pushed up against a fan's armpit from Copley to Kenmore. Technically, you could easily walk that distance anyway. And your excitement for the game would give you more energy. I just want my personal space back.

Personal bubble burst

To the tourist taking pictures with the turtle and rabbit in Copley Square: Have you really never seen a turtle or rabbit before? I get it. They're larger than usual, but it does not mean your entire tour group of 50 people needs to take turns sitting on them for pictures. No one at home cares you sat on a rock shaped like a rabbit. No one cares you stood near a statue. But I certainly care when I have to watch your group gawk at it like it's the Vatican. They're not real. They're not that big. Get over it.

Drink of the Moment
SHERRY COBBLER

PRICE: $13

INVENTOR: Katie Emmerson, bar manager at the Hawthorne

INGREDIENTS: Lustau East India sherry, orange Curaçao, muddled fresh berries, garnish of three blueberries, one raspberry, an orange slice and a mint sprig

FLAVOR: Strong aromatics from the mint and fruit shape the nose. The ice leavens the berries' juices, so it tastes lightly sweet without being cloying. Sherry grounds the fresh flavors in a touch of earth

SELLING POINT: "When people see the berries, they get very excited," Emmerson says.

ORIGIN: "Back in the mid-1800s, they were making all sorts of cobblers," says Emmerson. "It was when they started to use ice, so it required a utensil. It was the first drink that made the straw popular."

TECHNIQUE: "I picked Lustau sherry for its nutty qualities. We're using one strawberry, four raspberries and four blueberries. I muddled the berries with dry Curaçao."

PAIR IT WITH: The Late-Night, Last-Minute package upstairs at the Hotel Commonwealth, available after 10 pm. If your evening's been particularly enjoyable, for $199 you can take the elevator home for a spontaneous overnight stay that includes late check-out, room-service breakfast, a Dopp kit full of Malin + Goetz amenities and monogrammed slippers. Naturally, this means more time to plumb the arcana of the Hawthorne's menu.

LOOKING AHEAD: The Hawthorne is a shrine to esoteric cocktails, but there's always room for exploration. "One of my personal goals was to reach for things I might not always reach for," Emmerson says. "For me, that's the agave section." Look for six new tequila and mezcal drinks to appear soon. / Andrew Rimas

Pouilly's Pull

Those of us who are constantly chasing the next great wine can easily overlook the classics. Once upon a time, before chardonnay became ubiquitous, Pouilly-Fuissé was a go-to choice for round, smooth, fuller-bodied white wine. The prestige appellation of Burgundy's large Macon district, it has never really gone out of favor, but a recent blind tasting of current vintages hammered home its quality across the board. The following winners are all wines of real personality that play very well with subtly sauced fish and seafood. Produced by family-owned companies, they are chardonnays unencumbered by lavish oak or excessive alcohol.

VINCENT, POUILLY-FUISSÉ "MARIE ANTOINETTE," 2011
Antoine Vincent is the proprietor of the district's most famous single property, the Château Fuissé. This négociant bottling is a charming and reasonably priced expression with notes of ripe apple and peach. Smooth and creamy, showing a hint of peach-pit minerality and the lightest kiss of oak, this is a sleek, classy and understated Pouilly.

DOMAINE J.A. FERRET, POUILLY-FUISSÉ, 2010
Ferret enjoys a reputation as one of the Macon's finest domains. Growing on deep clay soils, its vines impart a richness that makes it easy to confuse the wines with "Montrachet" AOCs farther north. This vintage is a bit floral, with lush fruit on the palate and notes of toasted almond, vanilla, butterscotch, peach and racy minerality.

JEAN-PIERRE & MICHEL AUVIGUE, POUILLY-FUISSÉ "SOLUTRÉ," 2010
This producer sources from Solutré, a village with limestone and marl soils that tends to produce a crisp, flinty style of Pouilly. Light to medium in weight, it's ripe and apple-like on the palate, with a dry, subtle undertone of citrus. Like many of these wines, there's only a minimal oak impression.

WRITER AND SUBJECT

A BIOGRAPHER GETS TOO CLOSE TO HER MATERIAL IN THIS MYSTERY NOVEL.

THE PERFECT GHOST* By Linda Barnes
Published by St. Martin's, 310 pages, $25 hardcover

This novel is set on Cape Cod.

WRITING WITH ANOTHER PERSON—in this case co-authoring a celebrity's "autobiography"—involves a kind of inner kinship. Interviewer Teddy and shy co-author Em are working on such a project about Garrett Malcolm, a film director. When Teddy dies in a car accident, the devastated Em is forced to take over. In an intimate narrative device, she addresses her departed partner through all the stumbling sequelae.

Em continues to interview Garrett, although weird elements emerge, like her discovery that Garrett's big star is a secret alcoholic dwelling in a shack. The actor also turns out to have a sketchy interest in fire, fanning Em's suspicions so that she turns detective. To further complicate matters, suave Garrett, seducer of many, does just that with the vulnerable Em. And slowly, quite surprisingly, Em reveals she had a complex, coiled-up love for Teddy that went beyond their working life.

Then a tape recorder glitch reveals that cad Garrett actually holds her in contempt, and oh, how she rises like a snake in delicious revenge, discovering her hidden strength in the face of insult. Barnes skillfully conveys the flavors of her many characters—wily, mousy, narcissistic, famous and flopped—while Shakespeare quotations add literary fun.

FROM PAGE 230: "The men were racing into the icy surf, shedding their trunks as they ran, tossing them aside, and whooping as they plunged naked into the foam. It was a flash, a moment engraved in memory: the twin dimples in the very small of Pierce's back, the shoulders and pale flanks, the golden hair. I watched, and after that I could no more have appeared on the beach than I could have sprouted pin feathers." ■

WATER WORLD: Take a boat ride along the Copenhagen harbor and canals

The Escape Artist / Hannah Lott-Schwartz

COPE A FEEL

BIKING IS THE BEST WAY TO DISCOVER CÓPENHAGEN'S CHARM.

"SKÅL!" CHIRPS A FRIENDLY DANE, moving to clink his glass in a toast. "It's bad luck not to drink." It's also bad luck, he adds, to utter the traditional Danish toast (pronounced "skoal") and not look your companions in the eyes. Seven years bad sex—everyone knows that. Not to mention, this is a Viking tradition. "It's better to dine with the enemy so you know they're not burning down your house," he says cheerfully, again raising his glass.

Though Danish history is colorful with Viking lore, simplicity reigns in Copenhagen. On the eastern coast, the nation's capital radiates the untranslatable hygge, a sort of social serenity that borders on the sublime. From the purity of the cuisine to the majestic horizons and forest-lush landscapes, this seductive city and its neighboring towns exist at the intersection of old-world charm and new-age Neverland.

Overlooking one of Copenhagen's inner lakes, Hotel Kong Arthur is in line with the very serious push to make Copenhagen the world's first carbon-neutral capital by 2025. In a city with five times as many bicycles as cars, locals almost exclusively take two-wheels. Do as the Danes and rent a bike from the front desk to join one of the daily cycle tours for a pedal-pusher's feel for the city, or jet off on your own to discover the nearby Hipster Bridge (also known as Dronning Louise's Bro) and Assistens Kirkegård, the cemetery where Hans Christian Andersen and Søren Kierkegaard are buried.

Explore the coast for a day and ride to Osterport Station, where you can board a train to Hellerup and Charlottenlund Beach Park. There you'll ride along the coast, with views of Sweden, an old fortress and a building so highly designed you'd never guess its function—the Skovshoved Petrol Station was created in 1936 by Danish architect/designer Arne Jacobsen (of the Egg chair fame) and is still in use today.

End your ride at Jægersborg Dyrehave, or Deer Park, the aptly named royal hunting grounds founded in 1669 that span four square miles. At the top of a slow-climbing hill sits Hermitage Palace. To the south, the banks of a pond host herds of deer. Among them is an all-white breed, now extinct in its native Germany, with pale antlers in stark contrast to the red and brown varieties. As the animals drink, tiny butterflies flit from the overgrown grass, the palace completing the picture's background.

Though Dyrehaven hosts the world's oldest amusement park—Dyrehavsbakken, opened in 1583—Tivoli Gardens is the country's most popular attraction. Some 170 years old, the 20-acre park's enchanting gardens, fantastical rides, twinkling lights and playful atmosphere are said to have been the inspiration for Disneyland. Inside the Arabian-style palace toward the front of the grounds is Nimb Herman, a fine-dining restaurant. Serving superlative New Nordic cuisine, it's an early entrant in the farm-to-table movement that uses traditional preparation techniques to draw out deep flavors for complex, yet clean, compositions.

While some sites are almost obligatory—the charming, albeit somewhat underwhelming, Den Lille Havfrue, the seaside statue inspired by Andersen's The Little Mermaid and cast by Edvard Eriksen in 1913—the city contains countless treasures. Take note of Sögreni of Copenhagen, a custom bike shop that opened in 1981. The bikes are hand-built and world-renowned, and the shop itself is a paradise of parts: Frames hang from the ceiling; wheels dangle before the storefront window; bells in brass and steel line countertops; and vintage gear climbs the wall closest to the workshop, where the builders showcase their craftsmanship.

For an afternoon drink, head to the canals at Nyhavn, where hundreds of people line the streets, waiting to board the long, low, wide boats that tour the city. Buy a beer from a vendor and dangle your feet over the water's edge for some grade-A people watching. Or for a night out, head to the city's meat-packing district, or Kødbyen, which fills with the effortlessly chic around midnight. At Fiskebar, lounge chairs and crates encircle fire pits made from used tires. Grab a seat and raise your drink to your neighbors—"Skål!" Just make sure to look them in the eyes. ◆

ONE COULD BE FORGIVEN FOR ASSUMING any successful local restaurateur's second or third venture would be an instant hit. We've seen raved-about launches by vets like Jody Adams (Trade), Jeremy Sewall (Island Creek Oyster Bar) and Michael Leviton (Area Four). Forthcoming spots from Craigie on Main's Tony Maws, Oleana's Ana Sortun and Bondir's Jason Bond have food-scene followers practically camped out at construction sites. It's jarring, then, to find a new spot not just lacking its older siblings' sparkle, but sitting empty on a weekend evening two months after its debut. But so it goes with Society on High, the latest project from Ian Just, chef/owner of the jazz bar and brasserie Les Zygomates and trattoria Sorriso.

Occupying prime power-lunch and happy-hour territory, the FiDi newcomer dresses the part with a gray-cale palette, tufted black banquettes, a white marble bar, flat-screens and metal-mesh light fixtures. At 6 p.m. on a Thursday, it's full of necktied patrons sipping beer and munching fries at the bar, but they seem to disperse as the night wears on; unlike Les Zygomates, a low-key boite where regulars linger over dinner six nights a week, this feels like a pricey and efficient place for co-workers to cocktail Wednesday through Friday buzz.

While bacon remains the trend, especially carnivorous Society's bacon-laced cheesecake), the food doesn't always live up to its ambitious billing. That's not a fault, per se. A restaurant rooted in rhythm and pot-werk crowd will likely win more favor with fancified burgers and Jim Beam than with farro and Fernet Branca. But so many dishes fall flat that it feels uninspired.

Poor seasoning and under- or over-cooking are frequent faults. Two bar-menu staples, steamed mussels ($14) and grilled clam flatbread ($13), were marred by tiny, rubbery shellfish. A squeeze of broiled lemon helped but didn't save the mussels' pallid white-wine-and-garlic broth, and the flatbread was flat-out flavorless, the promised lemon zest and hot oil undetectable amid a blanket of cheese. Fish tacos ($11) had mushy, bland tilapia cradled in too-large flour tortillas; the dish's only kick came from sriracha-tinged aioli. Conversely, the lobster avocado "martini" (market price) suffered from seasoning overload, the creamy mousse's citrus overtaking the sweetness of the awkwardly large lobster chunks.

Better were the bar and lunch menus' fried Chesapeake Bay oyster po'boy ($14) and the Painted Hills burger ($13). The po'boy made good use of that sriracha aioli, the garlicky spice cutting the richness of the oysters' fried coating. The towering burger, an inch-thick beef patty with thick-cut bacon and sharp Vermont cheddar, was juicy and terrific when properly cooked. (A first attempt at a medium-rare burger arrived with a raw, sticky center and had to be sent back.) It was topped with fried onions so feather-light and tasty they deserve a spot on the menu as a side. Hot oil may be the kitchen's most reliable medium: Both plates come with superb fries tossed with parmesan and rosemary.

There are other moments of loveliness. A salad of baby iceberg wedges ($12) delivered a robust combo of roasted, chilled ripe tomatoes, crumbled Great Hill blue cheese and chewy chunks of smoky bacon over crisp lettuce. Buttery pan-seared scallops with bacon jam ($32) featured sweet, perfectly cooked meat complemented by vinegary black kale. (Leave the bland, leaden gnocchi on the plate.) The grilled pork chop ($28) was an impressive-looking bone-in cut topped with tangy peach-and-pepper relish. If not for the dull, under-salted sides of black-eyed peas and collard greens, it'd be an outstanding plat

While staffers are smiling, they're largely unhelpful with menu navigation. Can you tell us about the miso-glazed catfish? "It's served as a filet." What fruit is in the seasonal pie in a Mason jar? "I don't know." (And on delivery of the dish: "Let me know if you figure it out." We guessed strawberry-rhubarb.)

The cocktail list favors the sweet-toothed, employing lots of cordials and flavored spirits like pomegranate vodka. Good—and less sugary—bets include the Herb Garden ($11), a refreshing, aromatic mix of gin, chartreuse and muddled cucumber. Other libations feel like afterthoughts; the staff provided little guidance for the wine and beer list, giving only alcohol contents, not brew styles, for the latter.

At press time, Society on High's older siblings, Les Zygomates and Sorriso, were reportedly for sale. If the family is splitting, it may be especially unkind to judge one kid against the next. Still, we can't help but wish Society on High expressed more of its brethren's dominant traits—winning service, consistent cooking and ambiance you'd come back for night after night. For now, the occasional happy hour is where it's at. ◆

Q: WHAT DO YOU RECOMMEND TO GET RID OF BROWN SUN SPOTS?

A: Brown sun or age spots are a result of sun exposure over the years. They can be eliminated to restore a clear, flawless complexion. The protocol at SkinHealth Centers is a combination of light chemical peels or microdermabrasion to exfoliate the skin, followed by a light-based therapy such as IPL or fractional laser treatment. Lastly, we recommend certain professional-strength lightening products you can use at home to keep the brown spots from returning. We have found that this combination approach is extremely effective!

BLUE JASMINE ★★★

Movies / Sean Burns

BLUE-COLLAR BLUES

WOODY ALLEN'S BLUE JASMINE GIVES THE PROSPEROUS SOME PERSPECTIVE.

SHE PREFERS TO BE CALLED JASMINE, BUT HER name is really Jeanette. We first meet her on a plane, blathering her life story to a fellow passenger who would obviously rather read. Jasmine's is a rags-to-riches tale: Swept off her feet in college by a dashing young financial wizard to the tune of "Blue Moon," she has a glorious, worry-free life of dinner parties, charity balls and the kind of vacation homes owned by people who use seasons as verbs ("summering" in the Hamptons). Yet it's impossible not to notice the panic behind her eyes as she too adamantly insists upon her happiness. Played by Cate Blanchett in a go-for-broke turn, Jasmine is a frayed nerve. Clearly something terrible has happened.

Woody Allen's 43rd theatrical feature, Blue Jasmine, has become a surprise late-summer breakout hit with adult audiences deprived of entertainment, and it's easy to see why. This is a handsomely crafted movie with some excellent performances and a structure that provides surprises. (At this point, Allen's been doing this for so long and so prolifically that even his weakest movies are well made.) It's also a strange little duck, pitched nervously somewhere between tragedy and farce, existing in that refined, theatrical Woody Allen universe where only Woody Allen characters reside.

Jasmine is on her way to San Francisco to crash with her estranged sister, Ginger (Sally Hawkins). Things aren't as rosy as she tried so desperately to make them sound. Turns out her husband, Hal (Alec Baldwin), was a Bernie Madoff kind of fraud, who squandered hundreds of millions of other people's dollars and then hanged himself in prison after the FBI came calling. Jasmine's flat broke with no friends and zero job experience. All she has left is an increasingly desperate air of smug superiority.

It must be noted that nobody goes to see a Woody Allen movie for nuanced portrayals of the working class.

Allen's riffing on A Streetcar Named Desire here, and since Blanchett recently played Blanche DuBois on Broadway she's arrived ready and raring to go. Ginger works bagging groceries and dates a cheerful, hot-tempered Cro-magnon, who of course is named Chili. Jasmine is appalled by the tiny apartments, the boorish mannerisms and the idea that she might have to find a job she considers beneath her. Welcome to the 99 percent, sweetheart.

The movie deftly alternates scenes from the present with flashbacks to Jasmine's gilded period, lingering on the lavish estates, ostentatious jewelry and long conversations about absolutely nothing. As the movie wears on, Allen gradually reveals the almost superheroic capacity for denial that enabled Jasmine's storybook Manhattan fantasy to carry on for so long. Her beloved hubby is such a phony that at first the role seems to be one of Baldwin's worst performances until you realize Hal's just full of it. All the adultery and duplicity was going on right in front of Jasmine's face. But Jeanette didn't want her to see it.

Sometimes Blue Jasmine feels like a comedy, in which a condescending rich bitch finds her comeuppance in the working world. She begrudgingly takes a job as a receptionist at a dentist's office, where the boss (a very funny Michael Stuhlbarg) is so smitten he starts wearing more colorful ties to work. Yet there's such an anguish to Blanchett's performance that things never stay funny for very long. She's getting the lion's share of kudos and predictable Oscar talk, but for my money Sally Hawkins is even better as the quietly put-upon Ginger, regarding her annoying, troubled sister with a tender familial concern that's a beautifully underplayed counterbalance to Jasmine's histrionics.

Of course, it must be noted that nobody goes to see a Woody Allen movie for nuanced portrayals of the working class. After all, the guy is 77 years old, and I assume it's been decades since he's even spoken to anyone who isn't a millionaire. Everything Woody Allen knows about these people he learned from watching The Honeymooners, but I find something quaintly endearing about his cloistered 1950s sensibility. (In this movie, computers are mysterious things nobody can understand.) Besides, all the authenticity Blue Jasmine needs is provided in a startling supporting turn from Andrew Dice Clay.

Yes, you read that right. The disgraced macho-pig comedian delivers a performance of real complexity as Ginger's ex-husband, Augie. We come to find out that he's got a very good reason for resenting Jasmine (whom he insists on calling Jeanette), and late in the movie he stands toe-to-toe with Blanchett in a crucial confrontation that works as a dramatic punch to the gut.

BEYOND THE BLIND

VOCAL DYNAMO DASHES HER ROLLER COASTER DEMONS TO ROCK THE SPOTLIGHT AGAIN.

DON'T CALL IT A COMEBACK. BUT WHEN Beth Hart joined Jeff Beck to unleash her raspy vibrato on the Etta James classic "I'd Rather Go Blind" during a Buddy Guy tribute at last year's Kennedy Center Honors, it marked the singer's rebirth on the U.S. stage after more than a decade away. A rising major-label star in the '90s, Hart crashed and burned her bridges in a blur of substance abuse and mental illness.

"I don't think you can call it a comeback when you were never there in the first place," says the now-sober Hart, 41, who earned a standing ovation from a Kennedy Center audience that included the Obamas and members of Led Zeppelin.

"It made me feel so proud of coming back from being a full-time freelegal strung out and hating myself and pissed off at the world," she says. "It was so wonderful to be such a big show to feel that way, like a normal human being."

The emotional turnout for "I'd Rather Go Blind" shines a light on tracks in Hart's April release, Bang Bang Boom Boom, which showcases originals in more of a soul-bluesy direction than her rock efforts. And when she walks onstage recently to debut See Me, for a second Obama gig with supportive guitar virtuoso Joe Bonamassa balancing a handful of covers (one spot-on Etta and Tina Turner genre

It's all helped to set the stage for Hart's return to the road in the U.S. after a decade of work in Europe. "I never dreamed of coming back to the States," says the singer, whose band opens for the Rides—a new supergroup that includes Stephen Stills and Kenny Wayne Shepherd—on a tour that hits the Wilbur Theatre Sept. 7. "I so fell apart here that I think it was only natural that for years to come, I would be terrified to ever play here again. It's kind of like going back in the lion's den."

Though it may seem perplexing for a vocalist of such volcanic intensity to lack confidence, Hart's backstory reveals a mental and physical roller coaster. As a youth, she flipped between alcohol ("The only time I was drinking every day and being full-blown nuts was when I was 12 and 13") and anorexia, escape outlets that resurfaced in her 20s, when alcohol abuse led to seizures on the road. Hart began taking the prescription drug Klonopin and slid into further addiction.

"When we are in illness, that too must change," she explains. "Not because we get a break from God or anything, but because that's just scientifically the way things go."

But the bane of her existence was an unmedicated bipolar disorder. Even after Hart turned her life around at the start of the new millennium, marrying her road manager and succeeding in rehab, she suffered an episode in her 30s that landed her in a psychiatric hospital for a month and a half. She finally started the right medication. "When you lean toward the mania, there's grandiosity in the thinking and it's all about ego and being in control, so the idea of being out of control is just unfathomable," she says of her long refusal to treat the bipolar condition.

Hart's travails are reflected in Bang Bang Boom Boom, from the brooding "Baddest Blues" to "Everything Must Change," where she sings "Everywhere there's light/In the dying start to fight," nodding to her time in the psych ward. "When we are in illness, that too must change," she explains. "Not because we get a break from God or anything, but because that's just scientifically the way things go. What goes up must come down, and what goes down must come back up."

Musically, Hart channels her knockout voice through blues, ballads, gospel, rock and swing on the new album, although she's planning a more cohesive follow-up. "I love eclectic," she says. "It represents life so much more than one idea."

In turn, her concerts include flashes of her primal rock past. "The performance is dictated by the type of style," she says. "When we're doing a tune like ['90s hit] 'LA Song,' I'll usually play that alone at the piano. If we're doing something hard rock, I'll be stomping, jumping and rolling around. I look at it like having multiple personalities. When I'm doing a particular song, that personality comes out." ◆

THAT '70s PAPER

A 36-YEAR-OLD NEWSPAPER AFFIRMS THAT THE 1970S WERE AWFUL.

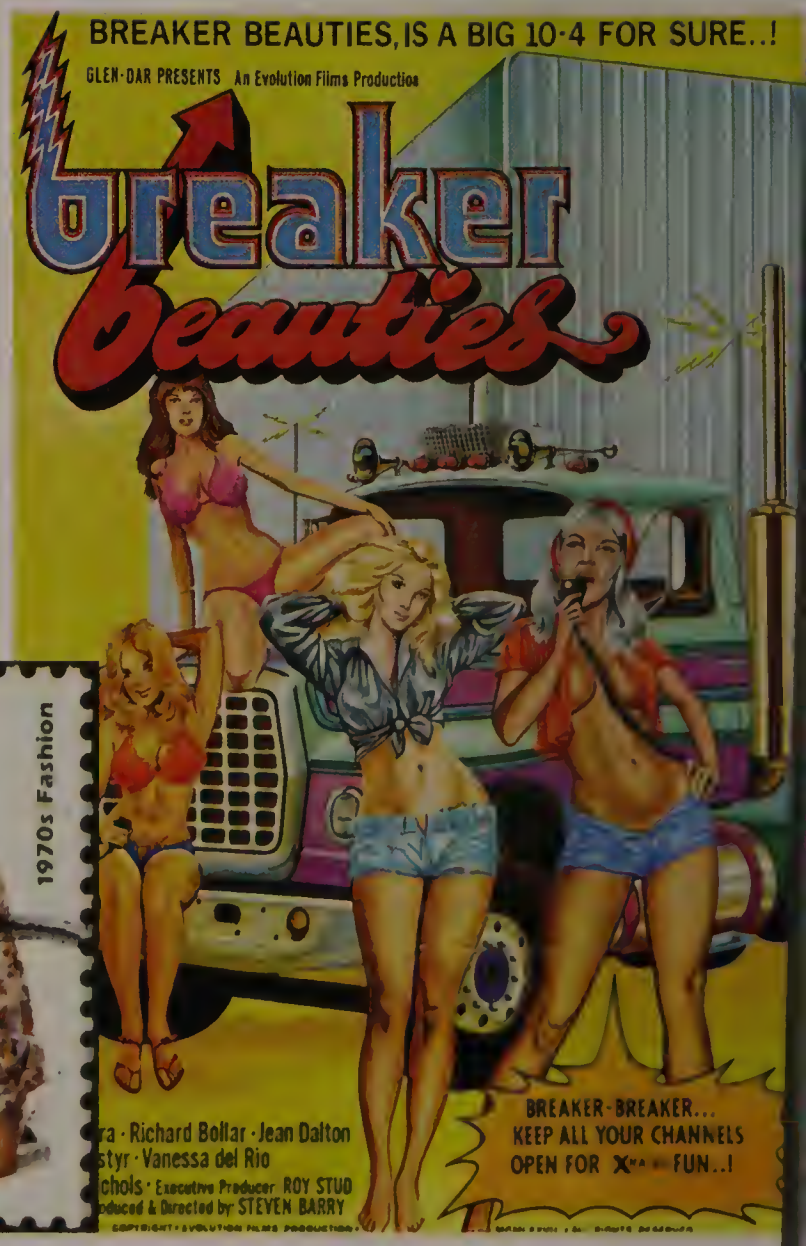
I OPEN MY MAIL TO FIND A CAREFULLY WRAPPED, slightly yellowed newspaper. It's a copy of the Charlotte News from Sept. 1, 1977. I'm momentarily mystified why anyone would send me such a thing until I see that this is the souvenir Elvis edition. I'd recently dressed as Elvis at an impersonator contest (as one does), so a friend of mine apparently decided to expand my collection of Elvis memorabilia by 100 percent. I sit down to read this relic and discover, based on this one-day window into '70s life, that '70s-themed parties should consist of people hanging around being bummed out that they won't be able to buy an iPhone for 30 more years. Also, the '70s were really pretty gross.

While the front page features a story about the Rev. Jim Bakker, a few pages later you've got movie listings for the local drive-in porno theaters (yes, that's plural). They say the Internet has in some ways severed our interpersonal connections, but I think it's the VHS tape that ended the era of getting in the ol' Buick and going to see a community showing of CB radio-themed porno Breaker Beauties. How did that work? Did you say, "Honey, I'm going out. I'll be back in three days. I want to see Breaker Beauties, but I need to drive to Iowa to make sure I don't run into anyone I know."

The classifieds section, is, as expected, the '70s version of Craigslist. The first page includes ads for two private detectives, the Las Vegas Showgirls massage parlor and a gay escort company—"Men for men only, women for women only, swingers welcome." One legitimate massage place sounds a little bit aggravated to be lumped in with the more dubious establishments, its ad reading, "Massage service only." That's right—in the '70s, you'd need to specify that your massages did not automatically segue into a scene from Breaker Beauties.

At least the sports section wasn't all about sex, right? Wrong! The front page of Sports includes a two-part story titled "Groupies: Athletes Use Them and Use Them Hard." Based on the Charlotte News' thorough reporting, 1977 sounds like it was a great time to be a major-league baseball player. Or stock car racer. Or even a member of the Charlotte Checkers hockey team, affirming once again that I really should've learned how to skate. The sports editor, Jim Ginn, writes, "When the touring golf pros [illegible] some of them go to town." On the "DATEBOOK" front, "One girl paid several of the drivers a house call one evening at a recent area race, during which time she flitted from room to room. They called her 'The Sneaker.'" I apologize if you're [illegible] that you're not used to live down south and her friends call her the Sneaker.

Why is there not a Groupies section in the paper today? You [illegible] baseball players. When I am sure I could pour Château Lafite into my coffeemaker and it would come out tasting like coffee. I think if you were a foodie in the '70s, that meant maybe you bought the family-pack of chicken legs rather than the candidly named "Tub O Chicken." Nowhere in the paper will you find the word "arugula."



Of course, there's a little bit of news in the newspaper. For instance, the story entitled "Life's Unkind to Hitler's Cousin." An intrepid wire-service reporter found Adolf Schmidt, Hitler's cousin, working at a factory in Gmünd. Poor Schmidt was not pleased to be discovered, declaring, "I have had it up to here with that cousin of mine." I think I would've written the headline as "Hitler's Cousin Prone to Understatement."

As for Elvis, he'd exited the scene about two weeks before. I can't say I blame him. ◆

INTELLIGENT DESIGN

THE FAMED FASHION DESIGNER TALKS ABOUT JEANS, BAD SHOES AND DRESSING CELEBRITIES.

IN AUGUST, MENSWEAR DESIGNER JOHN VARVATOS OPENED his newest store at Copley Place. Born in Detroit, Varvatos joined Polo Ralph Lauren in 1983 before moving to Calvin Klein, where he became head of menswear design, overseeing the launch of the menswear collection and the CK brand. In 1995, he returned to Polo Ralph Lauren as head of menswear design and created the Polo Jeans Company. He launched his own line in 2000 and was named GQ's "Designer of the Year" in 2007. He hosts a monthly radio show on Sirius, serves as a celebrity mentor on NBC's Fashion Star and this year saw the release of a limited-edition Chrysler 300 bearing his name. Varvatos is actively involved with the annual Stuart House Benefit and the Save the Music Foundation. He lives in New York.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Three adjectives to describe fashion in Boston?
JOHN VARVATOS: Historical. Evolving. Confusing.

What's your single favorite item of clothing to design?
Shoes.

A lot of designers say blue jeans are tough. I love working on denim. I wear jeans 363 days of the year. They're a part of everyone's wardrobe, and they're a part of pop culture. I find that the market is flooded with jeans, so it makes you want to raise the bar and be more creative in the process.

So how have you done that?
[illegible] Fit. Everybody wants their ass to look good in their jeans.

Easiest thing to design?
A white shirt. It's easy and everyone in the end. God is in the details. It's seeing really small things and how a collar sits or the right fit, the right proportions. But compared to other things, it's easy, because I don't have to worry about anybody not liking the pattern or the color.

What about the things you license, like fragrance?
Fragrance is a lot of work. We spend a lot of time with the guy we call "The Nose," Rodrigo Flores-Roux, who works for Givaudan and is one of the great perfumers in the world. We discuss, how is a guy gonna wear it? Is it a daytime or a nighttime scent? Is it a fresh thing? Is it a sexy thing? Is it tough? Exotic? Then, when you try to translate all that into chemistry, it's very complicated. The difference between 5 percent and 8 percent of one element is huge. And then there's the packaging, marketing, etc.

What's the thing designers make the most money off of? Probably fragrance. And accessories. With menswear, it's accessories. In women's, it's handbags and shoes. But a successful fragrance is a big moneymaker.

How would you describe your aesthetic? I'd say it has an Old World sensibility, meaning that it's got the quality and craftsmanship and detail and heritage, but with a modern edge.

How do you feel about the jibberish that's used to describe something as visceral as fashion? I hate it. It is a visceral experience, and trying to describe it in words is almost impossible. We're working on a press release for our Toronto store right now, and when I read it, it described the red doors, and all I could think of was an Elizabeth Arden salon, which isn't really what we were going for. [Laughs]

What band would you equate your brand with?
OK. John Varvatos is to menswear what Jimi Hendrix was to rock 'n' roll. I have a big picture of him in my office. He's always looking over my shoulder.

Is there someone in the public eye who you'd love to dress? We dress so many cool people and celebrities. Everybody talks about who we dress in Hollywood and television, and we have umpteen music people we work with. But I'm more excited when I'm on that Acela train coming back from Boston, and a guy's wearing my jacket and boots. Don't get me wrong. I'm ecstatic when Jimmy Page or Green Day wear my stuff, but the real deal is walking down the street and seeing a guy who looks amazing in something that's Varvatos.

Is there a trend in menswear that you're sick of and want to go away?
Colored jeans. I like colored jeans, but the problem with our industry is that when something becomes hot, everybody goes into excess overdrive on it.

"Everybody wants their ass to look good in their jeans."

When, if ever, are you going to do women's? If you'd asked me two years ago, I would've told you 2014 or 2015. But we have so many great things happening in men's right now, and we're growing so quickly, that I don't want to take my eye off it. I want to be the best in men's I can possibly be. That said, I started out doing, and I love doing, women's. There's a lot more freedom, in terms of silhouette and everything.

Designer you admire most?
Well, my mentor and someone I spent years working with is Ralph Lauren. He has very carefully and intelligently created a total lifestyle brand, but he's always remained true to himself. Plus, it's aspirational, yet it transcends economic barriers. He's the only one who's been able to get away with doing a $2,500 men's suit and a $200 men's suit. I think that's really brilliant. He's the king.

What do you think is the biggest mistake most men make in dressing?
Bad shoes. I talk to a lot of women and men who say if they're out on a date, the thing that turns them off the most is bad shoes. It's such an indicator of what's really deep inside.

So who's the John Varvatos man? A guy who's comfortable with himself and fairly confident. He has some kind of creative bone in him, even if he doesn't work in the arts. There's a part of him that dreams and sees the world that way. And he doesn't need logos. It's more about style than fashion.

Three items every man should own? A great-fitting pair of jeans. A great fitting—it's all about fit—dark suit that can go from day to night. And a great pair of boots that are both elegant and rock star. ◆

Circle of Wildlife

By Keir Cullen Janey

THERE WILL BE NO horsing around on the Greenway Carousel. As the 36-seat ride opens up on Labor Day weekend, Boston will welcome 14 characters inspired by sea creatures from the New England Aquarium and falcons that nest atop the Old State House. After collecting more than 175 drawings made by local elementary school students, sculptor Jeff Briggs of Newburyport spent three years researching the animals. "I had eaten it, but I had never seen a live cod fish up close," he says. "So I bought one, photographed and sketched it, and then my wife cooked it for dinner." Adding the finishing touches, painter William Rogers of Haverhill spent 15 months working on 80 total pieces. The project comes full circle on Aug. 31.

BEAR NECESSITIES

The Jungle Book was the original action-adventure tale, paving the way for future stories of wolf packs, boyish exploits and encounters with Bengal tigers. Mary Zimmerman's stage adaptation of Rudyard Kipling's collection of stories and Disney's animated classic speaks to the allure of the wilderness. Found in a basket deep in a jungle in India, young Mowgli is raised by wolves and lives as part of the animal kingdom —until a man-eating tiger forces him to leave. Accompanied by Bagheera the panther and Baloo the bear, Mowgli charts a dangerous journey, leaving the comforts of carefree jungle life for human civilization. Walk on the wild side from Sept. 7 to Oct. 13 at the Boston University Theatre. Lily Liberman

CHOMPING AT THE BIT If you're dreading the end of beach season, Jaws is always an argument in favor of sweaters and fall foliage tours. The quintessential blockbuster thriller remains, even in our pixelated age, cinema's best case for aquaphobia. Shot on Martha's Vineyard with a script of memorable one-liners, it tells a familiar story of a small seaside community chomped by a man-eating shark. For indelible scenes of Great White-induced destruction, head to the Coolidge Corner Theatre on Sept. 2, when the big fish tale lands on the big screen again. Nick Hansen

2 Guns ★★★½ Probably the most purely enjoyable of this summer's popcorn pictures, this hilarious south-of-the-border caper is a showcase for star wattage, with Denzel Washington as an undercover DEA agent working with Mark Wahlberg's naval intelligence officer to take down a Mexican drug cartel run by the always awesome Edward James Olmos. The only catch is that neither knows the other's secret, at least not before they accidentally rip off $42 million in cash from a secret CIA black ops slush fund. Double crosses and betrayals abound, with a sadistic government assassin (Bill Paxton) leaving a pile of bodies behind him on their trail. Packed with loving references to the scummy '70s cinema of Sam Peckinpah and Don Siegel, 2 Guns capitalizes on chemistry. Denzel's unflappable, smooth-talking jive makes a marvelous match for Wahlberg's bull-in-a-china-shop belligerence. Director Baltasar Kormakur has an expert eye for action sequences, but the real pleasure of 2 Guns is just watching the two leads blabbering at each other. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Fabulous From Stardom ★★★★ You sing along with [illegible] all the time, but I bet you've never [illegible] these ladies. Morgan Neville's jubilant [illegible] documentary moves the spotlight from center stage to the unheralded backup singers who have anonymously contributed to our pop-culture consciousness for the past 50-odd years. Darlene Love, whose voice defined Phil Spector's Wall of Sound, was taken advantage of by Spector's shockingly petty (and seemingly criminal) attempts to deny her recognition. Watch out for Merry Clayton, who showed up in a bathrobe with rollers in her hair in the middle of the night to wail on "Gimme Shelter" when the Stones were stuck in a rut. (The shot of Mick Jagger listening to her isolated vocal track is alone worth the price of admission.) Their stories are sad, as showbiz tales often are. But this funny, raucous party of a movie is a celebration, not just of wonderful music but of finally giving credit where it's due. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and West Newton.)

Ain't Them Bodies Saints ★★ There's a sparse, sad little crime drama buried somewhere inside writer-director David Lowery's debut feature, but it's hard to get a glimpse of it when the filmmaker's affectations keep getting in the way. Casey Affleck and Rooney Mara star as lovestruck Bonnie and Clyde types on the run in 1970s Texas, their vaguely explained spree coming to an abrupt halt in a shootout, after which Affleck's character takes the rap for her wounding a cop (Ben Foster). After four years in prison, Affleck escapes and embarks on a long journey home to reclaim his bride and the daughter he still hasn't met. Lowery cuts his scenes into self-conscious lyrical montages, ripping entire pages out of the Terrence Malick playbook and sending his talented cast wandering through sun-dappled fields of wheat. The cosmopolitan Mara is miscast as a bumpkin, but Affleck and Foster appear to be doing fine, understated work that's annoyingly obscured by all the aural and visual froufrou. No story could survive this molasses flood of mythic grandeur. (At Kendall Square and On Demand.)

The Attack ★★ Some husbands just don't pay attention. This glumly plodding Middle Eastern depress-o-rama stars Ali Suliman as a successful Arab surgeon living the high life in Tel Aviv, until the day his wife goes and blows herself up at a children's birthday party. Working from a book by Yasmina Khadra, director Ziad Doueiri drags our protagonist through the stages of denial, anger and acceptance. Suddenly shunned by Israeli society types, he heads for his hometown of Nablus to try to make sense of his wife's secret conversion from happy homemaker to radical terrorist. Constructed like a film-noir detective story on sleeping pills, The Attack is mostly Suliman wandering from one depressed location to another, hearing long-winded political talking points from all sides of the conflict. There's admirable attention to the details of daily life, but this kind of material is better suited for a novel. A movie needs a little more oomph than just watching somebody listen, especially an actor as sullen and poker-faced as Suliman. (At West Newton Cinema.)

Crystal Fairy ★★★ It is the summer of coked-up Michael Cera. The former whimpering man-child tops his outrageous cameo in This Is the End with another druggy subversion in this Sundance oddity from writer-director Sebastian Silva. Cera stars as an American visiting Chile, hell-bent on locating the legendary San Pedro cactus, which is supposed to have hallucinogenic properties. In the company of three eye-rolling locals (played by the filmmaker's brothers), Cera cluelessly and boorishly insults pretty much everybody unfortunate enough to make his acquaintance. It's one of the most super-heroically annoying performances I have ever seen. The prissy little brat meets his match in the title character, a hippy-dippy fellow American wanderer played by Gaby Hoffman. She's always guilelessly carrying on about spirit rocks and meditative chants, walking around naked and oblivious to her host's derision. The meandering movie eventually finds its way to the desert, where one stunner of a monologue by Hoffman sends this slight stoner comedy into deeper, more disturbing waters. (At Kendall Square.)

Elysium ★½ Sneaking in under the wire to wrestle the award for this summer's most stupidly illogical screenplay away from Star Trek Into Darkness, director Neill Blomkamp's follow-up to 2009's nifty (if wildly over-praised) District 9 is a health care immigration allegory that makes less sense the more you think about it. It's 2154 and the one-percenters have moved on up to a deluxe space station in the sky, leaving polluted, overpopulated Earth in the condition of a Rio de Janeiro favela. Matt Damon stars as an ex-con factory worker with a nasty case of radiation poisoning, attempting to crash the orbiting gated community for access to high-tech tanning beds that cure every illness. Jodie Foster is just awful as the hard-nosed homeland-security honcho barking orders to kill all the poor people with an accent from Planet Brando. Devoid of nuance, characterization or coherence, Elysium staggers from one arbitrary, unmotivated action sequence to another, and even Damon—normally the most reliable actor in movies—seems to lose interest about halfway through. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Fruitvale Station ★★★★ The shooting of unarmed 22-year-old Oscar Grant in the back by a Bay Area Rapid Transit police officer was a case that galvanized the public, with unnerving similarities to the recent George Zimmerman verdict. But this extraordinary debut film from writer-director Ryan Coogler leaves all that in the future, dialing back a day for a low-key, humanist portrait of the final 24 hours of Grant's life. It's a gentle film, with deep reservoirs of empathy and understanding. Fruitvale Station has a loose, hang-out vibe, following Grant around this Oakland community. Coogler is roughly the same age and from the Bay Area, which is probably why every detail in the picture feels so lived-in—and so right. Played in a brilliant, star-making turn by Michael B. Jordan, Grant's no angel, nor is he a martyr. It's a glimpse of one day in one life. Maybe it wasn't a remarkable life. But it was a life all the same, stupidly and tragically snuffed out. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

The Great Gatsby ★★ Australian dynamo and short-attention-span enthusiast Baz Luhrmann never found anything he couldn't turn tacky. So after the Hawaiian-shirt-clad hash he made out of Romeo + Juliet and the pillaging of 30 years of pop culture via massacred song snippets in Moulin Rouge comes his bizarre take on The Great Gatsby. It's a long, chintzy 3-D muddle based on a book that's not particularly suited to movies, but Leonardo DiCaprio happens to be amazing. The 1920s Jazz Age is scored to Jay-Z. Every party in the Hamptons looks like a live MTV report from Spring Break, all bumping and grinding, and the anachronisms clang like a broken church bell. But DiCaprio works wonders in a movie that's otherwise distracted by small, shiny objects. He's hooked on affectations, a millionaire pretender to the throne who came from nothing and thus always seems to be sinking in quicksand when confronted with high society's betters. This is a great performance. Too bad everything else about the film is rather awful. (At West Newton.)

The Heat ★★ 1/2 Set the DeLorean for 1986, and you just might have a grand old time with The Heat, a lo-fi buddy-cop comedy that tweaks the time-honored formula ever so slightly by replacing Mel Gibson and Danny Glover with Melissa McCarthy and Sandra Bullock. For the first half-hour or so, I thought it was gearing up to be one of the worst movies I have ever seen, but eventually it grew on me. It's easy to forget what a gifted comedian Bullock can be, but she's a real treat here, clomping around, condescending to everybody. It's only through prolonged exposure to McCarthy's foul-mouthed, usually hammered detective that we begin to see cracks in the facade. Bullock puts up an anal-retentive front, but deep down she can't wait to start swearing and drinking at lunch. The Heat is a throwaway movie, putting a distaff spin on pictures that probably weren't all that great in the first place. But formulas become formulas for a reason: because they work. This will play forever on cable. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

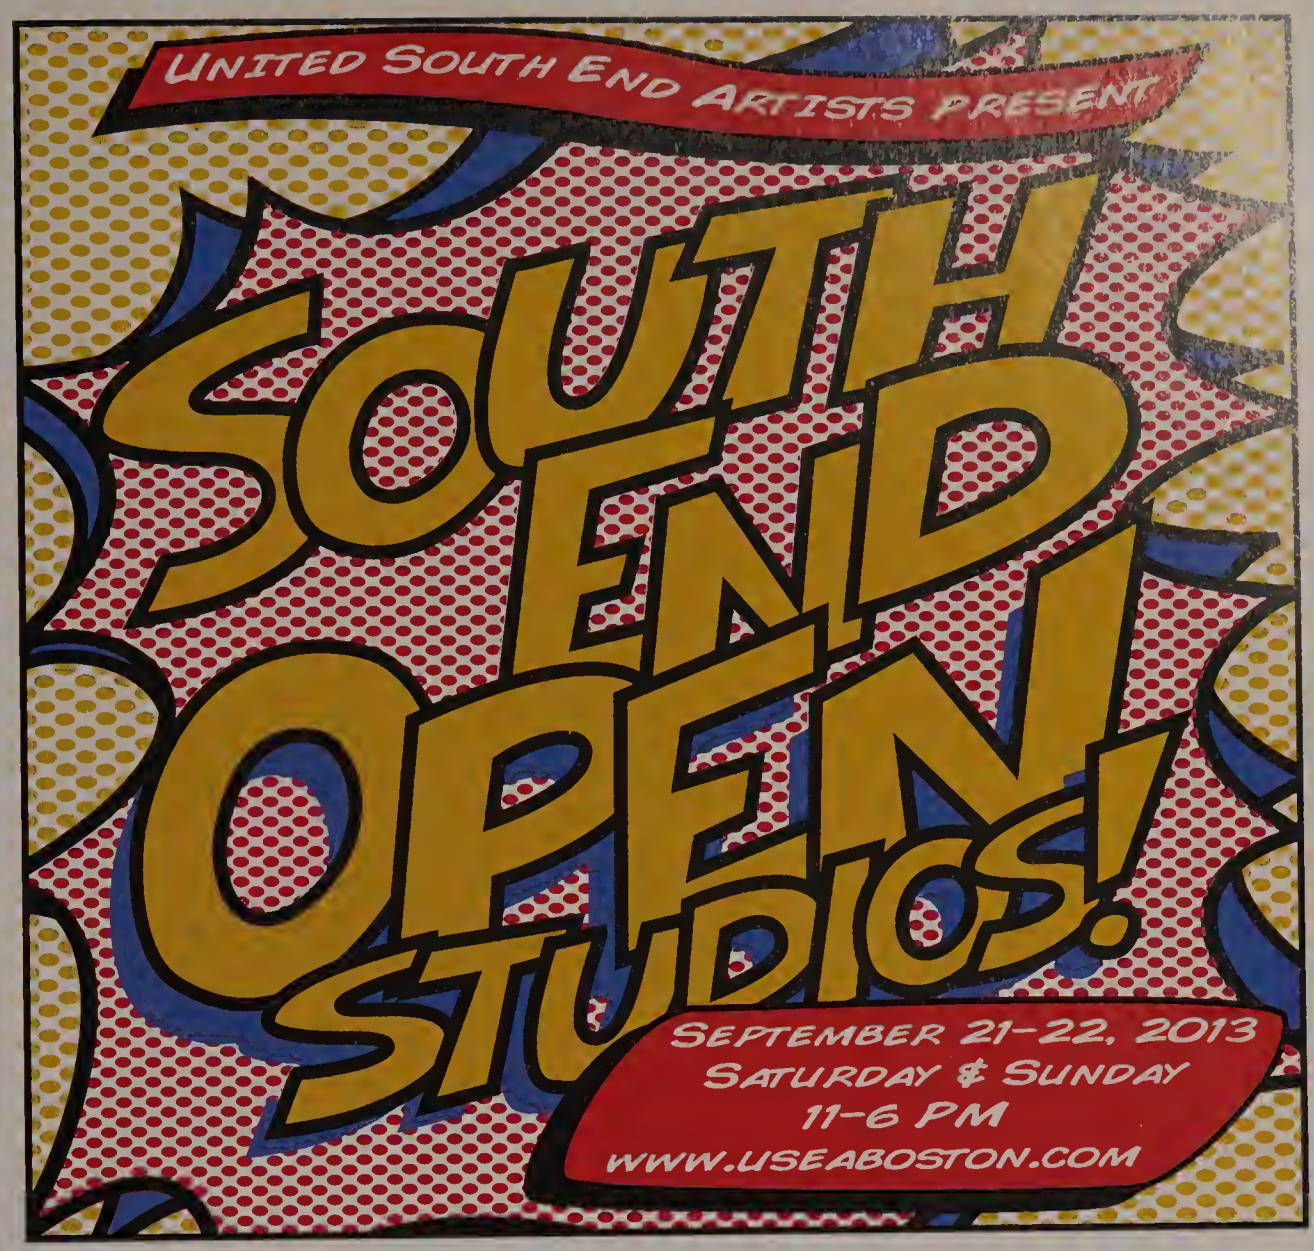
Vulgarity." The deliriously violent tale of a teenage comic book geek (Aaron Taylor-Johnson) donning a scuba suit to fight crime was stolen outright by Nicolas Cage's cracked wannabe Batman and his potty-mouthed 11-year-old sidekick (Chloë Grace Moretz). Cage is dearly missed in this sorry sequel, as is the gonzo energy that made the first film so rudely entertaining. Recycling one joke to diminishing, snail-paced returns, this unnecessary rehash finds our title character targeted for revenge by Christopher Mintz-Plasse's lisping, bondage-clad villain, calling himself a name that cannot be printed in this magazine. Replacement director Jeff Wadlow is pathetically overeager to offend, wallowing in ugly dialogue that sounds like it was written by a stunted adolescent who just discovered curse words. Co-star Jim Carrey chose to disassociate himself from the film, citing a crisis of conscience after Newtown. But the problem isn't that Kick-Ass 2 is immoral; the problem is that it isn't funny. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Lee Daniels' The Butler ★★½ A silly copyright dispute required the director's name to appear in the official title, which is ironic because this is the least Lee Daniels-y movie that Lee Daniels has ever made. The maverick behind Precious and last year's blisteringly sleazy The Paperboy takes it down a few notches for this Oscar-baiting tale of a gentle White House butler (Forest Whitaker) who Forrest Gumps his way through a brief history of the Civil Rights movement and several celebrity-cameo presidential administrations. The starchy screenplay by Danny Strong is often thuddingly obvious, pitting most of the conflict between Whitaker's shy retiring servant and his firebrand Black Panther son (David Oyelowo). What makes it interesting is Daniels' raw sensibility chafing against the stuffy material, with lively performances from Oprah Winfrey as a gin-swilling unfaithful wife and Cuba Gooding Jr. as a sidekick with his mind in the gutter. The bizarre cast includes John Cusack as Richard Nixon, Jane Fonda as Nancy Reagan, and most hilariously, Liev Schreiber as Lyndon Johnson. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Lone Ranger ★★½ Released amid a perfect storm of production delays, budgetary nightmares and celebrity schadenfreude, Gore Verbinski's oddball Western is the kind of box-office disaster that becomes a punch line for late-night talk-show monologues. Too bad, because this is one fascinating film. The weirdest summer blockbuster to come down the pike in eons, The Lone Ranger is a bitterly cynical, Sergio Leone-styled bloodbath full of fairy-tale flourishes and slapstick interludes out of a silent comedy. We begin in 1933 in an Old West museum exhibit, where Johnny Depp's Tonto is a statue come to life. He spots a little kid dressed up as the title character and starts spinning a semi-coherent, fanciful yarn about what really went down between him and Kemo Sabe. This device positions the picture as an alternative myth, a tall-tale corrective to "printing the legend." The Lone Ranger is way too violent and way too long, but also daringly subversive with some marvelous set pieces. I have no idea who this movie was made for, but I'm glad I saw it. (In the suburbs.)

Man of Steel ★★★ Brows furrowed when Dark Knight guru Christopher Nolan and Sucker Punch director Zack Snyder announced they were rebooting the saga of America's favorite illegal immigrant. I don't think anyone needs to see Kal-El conflicted with Batman's trendy neurosis. The drab color scheme and handheld photography feel like concessions to a fashionable "gritty" aesthetic, but otherwise I'm relieved to report that this is the same old Superman. Played with a wonderful, forthright decency by newcomer Henry Cavill, the Man of Tomorrow begins the film as an anonymous drifter, trying to hide his superpowers in a succession of go-nowhere jobs and dodging pesky Daily Planet reporter Lois Lane (Amy Adams). It's only when a crew of Kryptonian supervillains come threatening Armageddon that he finally busts out the cape and takes flight. The fractured flashback chronology is sometimes awkward, but Man of Steel boasts some terrific performances, particularly by Superman's two dads—Russell Crowe and Kevin Costner. The apocalyptic smackdowns suffer from CGI overload, but the movie is big-hearted and sincere. Just like its hero. (In the suburbs.)

Much Ado About Nothing ★½ This larky little Shakespeare adaptation, whipped up by Joss Whedon and his regular TV stock company during a 12-day break on The Avengers, is literally a home movie, filmed in Whedon's own house. Why not unwind from the stress of a massive blockbuster shoot by inviting all your old friends over to riff on the Bard's funniest play? Problem is that, even by home-movie standards, it's a terrible film, indifferently photographed on smeary, consumer-grade black-and-white digital video. Much Ado shovels mass quantities of iambic pentameter into the mouths of untrained third-string television actors, most of whom appear to have learned their lines phonetically. Not since Baz Luhrmann's Romeo + Juliet have I been so convinced that a cast had no idea what they were saying. These folks might as well be speaking Klingon. It's all buffoonish clowning around, sexy-time pantomimes



and drunken dances. The barn-door-sized performance by Alexis Denisof might be my new least favorite thing ever. I kept waiting for him to slip on a banana peel. (At West Newton.)

Pacific Rim ★★★ 1/2 The beguiling thing about Guillermo del Toro's Pacific Rim is just how well thought out it all is. Yes, we're talking about that movie in which skyscraper-sized robots fend off attacks from gigantic Godzilla monsters. It's a rock 'em-sock 'em display of mass distraction, but it has obviously been brooded over and mused upon for years by del Toro and his co-screenwriter, Travis Beacham. Pacific Rim exists in a complete, fully realized universe, which is a high compliment for a movie that also feels like it was dreamed up by an 8-year-old splashing around with toys in the bathtub. Dedicated to Ray Harryhausen and Ishiro Honda, it's madly in love with all those Creature Double Feature UHF-channel staples, ushering the man-in-lizard-suit kitsch into a new age of IMAX 3-D digital filmmaking technology. Del Toro has been missing from movies for five years, but he's back with a vengeance here, and his imagination clearly knows no bounds. There's a childlike glee to Pacific Rim. It's dumb fun done smart. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Short Term 12 ★★★★ Roger Ebert once wrote that watching acts of kindness in movies always made him cry. I thought about that line a lot during this remarkable film from writer-director Destin Cretton, probably because it reduced me to a puddle somewhere around the 40-minute mark and I stayed that way for the duration. Based on the filmmaker's own experiences working in a foster-care facility, Short Term 12 follows a couple of 20-somethings who manage a temporary group home for at-risk kids. They're not therapists, more like baby sitters with infinite patience, and this funny, warm and wonderful movie depicts the way their typical workday swings from comedy to tragedy and back again. Brie Larson is a quiet revelation as the seemingly unflappable Grace, so capable of helping everybody except herself. John Gallagher Jr. is just as good as her co-worker and not-so-secret boyfriend, exuding goofy generosity. The film is so moving because there are no easy answers or pat resolutions, just good people trying to do the best that they can. (At Kendall Square.)

This Is the End ★★ 1/2 One time there was this great party at James Franco's house that got ruined by the rapture. Or at least that's the idea of this wildly self-indulgent, occasionally hilarious shambles from writer/directors Seth Rogen and Evan Goldberg. A sprawling cast of Hollywood's most self-deprecating comics star as themselves, with Jay Baruchel visiting from Canada and not so secretly resenting childhood buddy Rogen's douchey new movie star pals. Playing comically exaggerated versions of their offscreen personas, Rogen's the affable pothead, Franco's a pompous pseudo-intellectual, and Jonah Hill oozes passive-aggressive smarm. And then the world ends. It's the same cheerfully vulgar bromance dynamic you'd expect from the writers of Superbad, with an added element of the apocalypse. The best jokes here revolve around just how pampered and useless actors are in a crisis, while looters and natural disasters are no match for the destructive power of Danny McBride. Too heavy on the improvisation and at least half an hour too long, This Is the End is also often quite terribly funny. (At Boston Common.)

The To Do List ★★ 1/2 Written and directed by comedian Maggie Carey, this semi-autobiographical coming-of-age story stars Aubrey Plaza as a classroom know-it-all goody-two-shoes who handles sex the same way she aced AP chemistry. She makes a list of every naughty activity she has yet to try, and sets about clinically crossing off items with a comical collection of shocked and awkward teenage boys. The To Do List is nothing if not brutally frank about just how unsatisfying early sexual experiences can be, especially when divorced from affection. There are many laughs mined from Plaza's all-business efficiency in treating erotic encounters like homework assignments, and the dumbstruck faces of horndog dudes who can't believe their luck. She learns the hard way why so many of these things are known by slang terms that end with the word "job." They're work. Carey goes a bit too often for the easy gross-out, but despite the childish sight gags, what salvages the movie is a refreshingly adult attitude toward the messy matter of sexuality. (At Somerville.)

The Wolverine ★★ 1/2 Few films fall apart as spectacularly in their third act as this second attempt to give Hugh Jackman's knuckle-knived berserker a stand-alone franchise apart from his mutant X-Men pals. This time around he's on the run through the Far East, protecting an heiress (Tao Okamoto) marked for death by the Yakuza, various ninjas and a few rotten relatives. What makes The Wolverine so refreshing for so long is its smallness of scale. There's no apocalyptic CGI grandeur, just a lot of close-quartered fights full of sharp, pointy objects. Journeyman director James Mangold hews to clean compositions, clearly defined action geography and striking use of the Japanese locations. It's tightly focused, even intimate by comic book standards. Until all of a sudden, it isn't anymore. The film's final segment retreats to a generic industrial space for a cacophony of preposterous plot twists and weightless computer-generated destruction, complete with the now obligatory mid-credits teaser for the next installment. Such a shame, as this was almost a real movie. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

World War Z ★★ 1/2 After all the troubled production rumors, delayed release dates and reshoots, producer/star Brad Pitt's $200 million zombie apocalypse movie finally arrives, and I guess it's all right. Throwing out most of the Max Brooks book from which the film takes its title, World War Z gives Pitt the Tom Cruise role as humanity's last hope after a killer virus turns everybody into frothing, herky-jerky monsters. As a retired United Nations investigator inexplicably called back to work to combat this crushing epidemic, Pitt furrows his brow and gives one of his blander leading-man performances. His job seemingly is to trot around the world witnessing wild, extravagantly elaborate scenes of devastation while being smarter and more handsome than everybody else. It's an eye-popping spectacle, and weirdly remote. Only in the film's third act (notoriously taken over by an entirely different creative team) does the movie really cook, trapping key characters in an enclosed location with clearly defined goals for one corker of a white-knuckle suspense sequence. Memo to Hollywood: Less is more. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

MUSIC

Edited by Sarah Hagman

NEAR AND DEER There's a lot of positive buzz surrounding Deer Tick's forthcoming Negativity. While their two previous releases strayed from their usual sound, the alt-country rockers are returning to their signature style while still exploring new territory. Announced with a banner-toting plane, the album has frontman John McCauley getting personal, riffing on a split with his fiancee and his father heading behind bars. Come late September, expect the new album to pack a punch with raw vocals, a duet with Vanessa Carlton and collaborations with Los Lobos. But first, the Providence natives play another beer-drenched show on Sept. 7 at Boston Calling on City Hall Plaza. Sarah Hagman PHOTO: SAYARD EGAN

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

THE WORLD UNCOLORED Paul Caponigro stopped pursuing a career as a pianist years ago, but he counts his musical training as a significant influence on his photographic eye. With dramatic spatial compositions, the collection of black and white images in Japan & Beyond captures the striking architecture and landscapes of the Far East as well as places closer to his native Boston. There's nothing instant behind this former Polaroid consultant's success, as his 60 years of work span the globe and encapsulate the spiritual power of nature's wonders. Broaden your world through Oct. 6 at the Pucker Gallery. / Rima Butto

GLOBAL POSITIONING STORIES

Nothing puts you on the map quite like Becky Cooper's new book. Cooper walked through the streets of Manhattan with large, blank maps of the borough and asked strangers to fill them by marking places of personal significance and then mail them to her later. The end result unfolds in Mapping Manhattan, which includes 75 intimate accounts of the borough. Landmarks point to stories of love, laughs and hardship as each person tells a story through cartography. "I Love NY" gets a whole new meaning on Sept. 9 at the Harvard Book Store. Frankie Olito

Restaurants

ABE & LOUIE'S [793 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-536-6300, abeandlouies.com] Abe & Louie's is the quintessential American steakhouse, serving prime cuts of corn fed, Midwestern beef, fresh seafood and garden produce. Steaks are aged on the bone for six weeks to ensure maximum flavor. Signature dishes include the bone-in filet mignon, NY sirloin and swordfish chop. With its high quality food, outstanding service and classic interiors, this award-winning restaurant has consistently remained a Boston favorite since its debut in 1998.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

DOUZO MODERN JAPANESE RESTAURANT & LOUNGE [131 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-859-8886.] Douzo is a Modern Japanese Restaurant and Lounge located in Boston's Back Bay/South End neighborhood. A beautiful and modern decor to complement a wide range of traditional and innovative menu items. Serving only the freshest and highest quality ingredients available for the best taste. Valet parking is available Wednesday through Saturday and validated parking for the adjoining parking garage after 5pm. Take-out and delivery offered daily as well with pre-packed sushi Monday through Sunday.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

JOE'S AMERICAN BAR & GRILL [9 locations in the Boston greater area, visit joesamerican.com] Joe's serves classic American comfort food in a comfortable setting, making it a local favorite for lunch, dinner, weekend brunch or take-out. Everything is made in-house, from the famous clam chowder to their juicy burgers or fall-off-the bone ribs. With carved wood, stained glass and vintage lighting, Joe's is reminiscent of your favorite New England watering hole. Try the bloody mary or one of their local beers on tap.

JOSE MCINTYRE'S [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Jose McIntyre's is located across from the Aquarium on Milk Street. This is Boston's only Mexican-Irish restaurant and bar. For close to two decades Jose's has been an institution with the after work and late night party crowds. If the Dos Equis man is the world's most interesting man, Jose McIntyre is the world's most entertaining. Come experience the most unique venue in Boston. With 5 rooms, 3 bars, 2 floors and a game room; José is the perfect place to unwind with co-workers or host a celebration.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

SAMBA STEAK & SUSHI HOUSE [1138 Worcester Rd. (Rt 9E) Framingham, MA 01702, 508-628-0288] Samba Steak and Sushi House is MetroWest's hidden gem and the perfect place to host your company holiday party. Our private function room seats 20 - 100 people and is ideal for either an intimate gathering or a festive fete. Samba will customize a package suited specifically for your tastes, including a variety of entertainment options. Call 508-628-0288 to discuss your holiday plans.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 DARTMOUTH STREET, BOSTON, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

Beer Specialty

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Something's always brewing at Best of Boston's award winning beer bar. IF YOU ADJUST FOR INFLATION

It was the perfect combo of party and real estate porn when the Vineyard Playhouse hosted its annual Summer Gala at Blue Heron Farm, the estate where Obama used to stay on Martha's Vineyard, now which belongs to the famous British architect Sir Norman Foster and his fetching Spanish wife, Elena.

The [illegible] Eduardo was there to greet guests, who were [illegible] for a glimpse of the place before they'd even parked their cars. By the time they'd belied up to the bar in the horse barn where the band was playing, anyone who wasn't wowed was either blind or jaded, as the house and gardens certainly qualify as stunning, the real visual treat was the new pool pavilion that Foster designed. I uttered to one in, to quote the charming Eliza Doolittle, "Mi casa es tu casa."

Meanwhile, all the usual suspects and subsequently arrayed themselves in their finest finery. Among them the evening's co-hosts, New York interior designer Friederike Biggs and her investment guru husband, Jeremy, brunette movie star Brooke Adams, board members Paula Lyons and Linda Comstock with the former's husband, Arnie Reisman, and the latter's main squeeze, Scot "The Texan" White, legal eagle Alan Dershowitz, über-intellect Skip Gates, donut mogul Bob Rosenberg and the flawless Mary Wolfson, budding actress Anna Yukevich, Palm Beach arts patron Marilyn Meyerhoff, and numerous equally tanned and attractive others.

There was a blessed minimum of blah-blah-blahing and a wildly entertaining sword-fight exhibition by Playhouse actors, delicious little nibbly things, and that perfect late-afternoon light that made everyone look their best while raising a boatload of money for the construction of a theater to be named after the late Oscar-winning actress Patricia Neal.

No island party is complete without endless discussion of real estate (it's something of a blood sport on both the Vineyard and Nantucket), but this particular evening's example surely wins in the Missed Opportunity category.

Near the bar, I ran into a man who said, "I looked at this place 20 years ago for $970,000. These people paid almost $22 million."

NEXT TIME, THINK PINK

You know a party's truly civilized when the ex-husband of one of the co-hosts not only attends but stays as her houseguest for the weekend.

That was the case when patrician Persian beauty Mahsa Noble (celebrating her fabulous 40th!) teamed up with some friends to host a brunch at the Vineyard Haven manse of Tisbury royalty Beverly and Stuart Halpert for the Alliance for Children.

The other hosts—Ann and Donald Brown and Jessica and Norman Hall—greeted guests such as Vineyard grande dame Rose Styron, Boston Pops bigshot Dennis Alves, up-island indigenous princess Cristina Isabel Vasquez, scorchingly-hot jewelry designer April Soderstrom, the square-jawed Brian Malone, Noble's sexy ex, Ken, her exquisite sister, Maryam Karimi, blond babe Donna Stearns, the unflappable Kristina Lyons, homegrown goodness Francesca Kelly, the exceedingly droll Paul Dolman, wildly talented musician Dan Rodman and his parents, Bruce and Mercedes, power chick Sandy Missakian, brunette beauty Alka Thukral and her handsome husband, Nik, a woman wearing the same shade of toenail polish as me, and the charity's founder, Filis Casey, who pried open the crowd's wallets to raise money for an orphanage in Haiti.

"Nobody told me about the Vineyard dress code. I'm from Arizona. Brown works in Arizona."

The food was delicious, the prosecco flowed the way prosecco ought, and the denizens of one of the most elite places in the world did something good for the children in one of the most impoverished places in the world.

Meanwhile, overheard by the bar: "Nobody told me about the Vineyard dress code. I'm from Arizona. Brown works in Arizona."

THE NATURE OF ART

I NEVER MET SEAMUS HEANEY WHEN HE lived here, but I knew bartenders who spoke of his appreciation for a well-built Guinness. Through his audio recording of Beowulf, I discovered the familiar beauty of his voice, rumbling with that peat-smoked Ulster timbre—I sometimes played the CD for my infant daughter in the weird hope she'd absorb the cadences of the scops. Now that he's dead, there's much talk of his early reputation as a poet of frogspawn and dug potatoes. Of mortality tasted in the juice of overripe blackberries. As a poet of nature.

Oscar Wilde wrote that "the more we study Art, the less we care for Nature. What Art really reveals to us is Nature's lack of design, her curious crudities, her extraordinary monotony." While very funny and insulting to scientists, this isn't true. Nature is why art exists.

Art, at its beginning, was lumps of ivory and calcite smoothed into the shape of Aphrodite's breasts. It was a guy in the Upper Paleolithic who saw the sublime in the female body and tried to catch it in limestone. It was ochre streaks on rock, marking the lineaments of a bull. Wilde might have sniffed at such curious crudities, but art was born, like everything else, out of nature.

By looking at the arts calendar in this issue, you might think we've come a long way from 35,000-year-old statues of goddesses who look like they feel a lot of lower back strain. But, as Heaney's poems prove, the most resonant subject of art is nature. Is life.

Picture Perfect

If a picture is worth a thousand words, this page could hardly begin to describe the Photo Nights Boston Photorama. Large-scale six-by-10-foot projections of photographs from professional and amateur photographers will canvas the walls of the South End's Cyclorama on Oct. 3, making the space feel like the inside of a 3-D View-Master. "Photography is a powerful medium," says Photo Nights Boston founder and former Improper photo editor Katie Noble. "When these images are projected in a large format, we're hoping to really create an impact, a wow factor."

The displayed images will be the winners of a monthlong contest, judged by curators from local galleries and museums as well as nationally recognized photographers. Whether taken on a Nikon or a Nokia, the featured works promise to offer a wide range of perspectives, with categories for Boston Strong, nature, portrait, fine art, motion/action and light. Noble hopes the event will connect the Boston photography community and create a cultural dialogue between individuals of all camera skill levels. Even those who'd prefer Instagram over a Digital SLR. / Hannah Sheinberg

AN OPEN BOOK

TALES OF A RESTAURATEUR

DAVIO'S OWNER STEVE DIFILLIPPO IS as much a raconteur as a restaurateur, and there's one story he especially loves to tell.

A man walks into Davio's with a date. When he's told by DiFillippo (who happens to be working the front of the house) that there's a 45-minute wait, the guest plays a handful of BS: "I know Steve," he tells his host, who responds by telling the name-dropper he'll see what he can do. After a not-so-long wait at the bar, DiFillippo seats the couple, whereupon the man tells him he'll "call Steve to let him know what a great job you're doing." Politely, DiFillippo thanks him and walks away.

The moral of the story? It's all about the guest, which just happens to be the title of DiFillippo's forthcoming book. Instead of embarrassing the blowhard in front of his date, DiFillippo ensured the satisfaction of yet another guest. It's All About the Guest is really "about life," DiFillippo says. Hitting shelves in October, it's a tasty mix of business musings and "crazy stories," spiced with recipes and already praised by the likes of disparate DiFillippo buddies Tom Brady and Todd English. As for the secret to his success? "Do the right thing every single day," he advises. "I have a moral compass I try to follow." He also has advice for diners who want the best service: "Just try smiling. Make eye contact with the host and server. Go to a restaurant two or three times a month, and be a regular."

RECIPE FOR SUCCESS: Davio's pomodoro pasta

TRIPLE VISION

TRIO TRANSFORMS BACK BAY SPOT

IT'S A SOUP-TO NUTS ORIGIN STORY. Or chowder-to-nuts, more specifically.

Harry Collings was eating the chowder at Abby Lane when he spotted the blue-haired chef in the kitchen. He called Jason Santos over to compliment him on the soup, and next he had a business partner. With design ace Taniya Nayak on board, the three owners of Back Bay Harry's went to work with their plan to overhaul the space previously occupied by neighborhood fave Geoffrey's.

"We wanted to keep some of the flavor," Collings, a retired BRA official, says. "We also wanted to preserve the price point. We want people to be able to go a couple of times a month or a week."

Set to open in mid-September across from Liberty Mutual's new headquarters (and downstairs from The Improper Bostonian), Back Bay Harry's will incorporate a few items from Geoffrey's, like refurbished chandeliers. But the bar has been moved across the room, allowing patrons—while sipping on drinks from a cocktail menu created by Abby Lane's Jared Mountain—to watch passers-by on the new windows. A wooden round table attached to the end of the stone bar will give a group of six to eight people a more lively setting than a spot in the dining area. And they'll have a view of what Nayak calls her Lite-Brite wall, a collection of backlit wine bottles laid lengthwise.

"The minute I walked in here, I knew the vision I was hoping for, and it's executed exactly the way I had thought," Nayak says.

The effect is intended to be casual elegance with art-deco touches, and most diners will also have a view of the kitchen behind a large sheet of glass, putting Santos on full display. Harry's is the third restaurant for the former Hell's Kitchen finalist, and his signature can certainly be found on the menu. To satisfy his color palette, there's the blue onion, a take on Outback's bloomin' onion. To satisfy his customers' palates, there are three types of pizza as well as beef wellington, vodka-battered fish and chips, and fresh squid-ink pappardelle. In homage to Geoffrey's popular mozzarella sticks, Back Bay Harry's offers manchego "cheese sticks." Entrees on the dinner menu range from $18 to $22, while lunch includes a few more sandwiches and salads. Santos sounds confident.

"Usually when I write menus, I'll go back and want to change something," he says. "But when I go back and look at this, I never want to change anything."

SMFA graduate Dawit Petros returns to Boston to present his exhibition Sense of Place, on display beginning Oct. 26.

TELL US ABOUT YOUR MUSEUM OF FINE ARTS EXHIBIT. It really is a culmination of this project that I've been working on in the past five years. It started in Harlem, and then it went to Ethiopia, to Senegal, to Sao Paulo, Brazil, and then this part of it is in Boston. The work is photographs, installations, painted wall murals and sculptures. I use all of these different things to explore these urban places. So, I'm attempting to find, in a different way if you will, to unpack a place.

WHERE ARE SOME OF THE PLACES YOU'VE LIVED IN AND VISITED OVER THE YEARS? I was born in East Africa, a little country called Eritrea, and we were born in the midst of a rather tenuous conflict between Eritrea and Ethiopia, which precipitated our movement from Eritrea through Ethiopia, Kenya and then to the UK and finally Canada. I've traveled extensively to various parts of Central America and parts of Africa.

IS THERE ANYWHERE THAT YOU HAVEN'T VISITED YET THAT YOU'D LIKE TO GO TO? The place that I'm really, really keen to get to right now is Italy. Italy has a very long and complicated history. It's a country that colonized Eritrea, which is where I'm from, and in many ways set into motion the mechanism that generated our departure.

HOW DO PLACES THAT YOU VISIT INFLUENCE YOUR ART? I think that the central question is always trying to figure out what the history of a particular place is and how one can create one's own history within the context of the place. How do you, as somebody who just arrived, attempt to understand or make your own place in it?

WHAT DO YOU MOST ENJOY ABOUT BEING AN ARTIST? Art allows you to raise questions that most people in their day-to-day lives don't think to do. Being a cultural worker allows you to shape conversation, allows you to help raise a certain consciousness, allows you to think about things most people think to extract or to remove or to disengage from their reality. / Sarah Hagman

Finger Painting

Imagine one of Jackson Pollock's paintings jumping off the canvas and into your hands. Victoria Shen makes that a reality at the Modernist Manicure pop-up nail salon at Made in Fort Point on Sept. 13-15 and Sept. 20-22. The Somerville artist recreates 20th-century works by Piet Mondrian, Kasimir Malevich, Morris Louis and more. For Shen, dialing down the originals into miniature works of art is a unique challenge. "The nail polish is an interesting medium because it has specific qualities that make it more challenging to work with than traditional artist paints like acrylic, oil and watercolor," Shen says. The goal of these free manicures is to play modernism against relational aesthetics, in which art creates open-ended social interactions. Shen uses strategies from both movements to spark conversation—and make your nail art look like it belongs in a museum. / Coryn Doncaster

BRACE YOURSELF: Lana Soussan designs fair-trade bracelets.

WRIST FACTOR

You may have put fifth grade behind you, but friendship bracelets will always be in style. That's the philosophy of hair stylist and jewelry designer Lana Soussan who founded Gypsies + Debutantes in 2012 after years of making [illegible] for friends. Named for the range of [illegible] she designs, her colorful arm candy is adorned with crystals and vintage [illegible] that give the bracelets a more "grown-up" edge. "The [illegible] truly has a bohemian feel," Soussan says, "but there's also an element of nostalgia that people find comforting. Certain days of from [illegible] Joseph Salon, she travels to source new textiles and materials, and she's expanded the line with necklaces, earrings and even watches. Thanks to increased demand, she now works with a South American fair-trade women's co-op; Indigenous artisans craft the woven part of each piece, which Soussan later embellishes by hand in Boston. With no more than 25 pieces produced in most styles, it'd be rare to find someone rocking anything similar, making them a perfect fit for the post-playground set. / Rima Butto

STEAMING OVER T TIME

TO THE LAST T: I live in Mission Hill, and one night I had to take the T home from Lechmere. But I was a minute late. I watched as the last T left the station. What hurts the most was being so close. It was 12:15. That's early by many city standards. Why must I cut my night short just to catch the T? Why must I be a slave to the T schedule? After my intoxicated friend tried to break into the station out of revenge, I had to walk, in defeat, from Cambridge to downtown, then pay for a taxi for the rest of the way home. My feet hurt and my wallet was empty. Thanks, T, for leaving a minute before I did.

Alone without transportation

TO "ANIMAL LOVER, STATUE HATER" IN THE FALL FASHION ISSUE: You poor silly dear, the people taking pictures of the Copley Square statues of the turtle and rabbit have a bit more exposure to education and culture than you. The story is of "The Tortoise and the Hare," which refers to one of Aesop's fables (a collection of stories credited to Aesop, a slave and storyteller believed to have lived in ancient Greece). The creator of this art is none other than Nancy Shon, a West Newton artist (who also created the famous bronze sculptures in the Public Garden based on Robert McCloskey's famed Make Way for Ducklings children's book). These bronze sculptures were dedicated in 1996 on the 100th anniversary of the Boston Marathon as a tribute to the runners of the most famous American marathon. They are a metaphor for the runners in the Marathon. So you see, people love the stories, love the art and love the history here in Boston. And sitting on the sculptures actually keeps the bronze naturally polished.

Not native to Bah-ston

TO THE LADY CLIPPING HER FINGERNAILS ON THE T: Do you not feel everyone's eyes on you? Do you not feel everyone's hate? Do you not feel everyone's disgust? Do you not have a home to do this in? So many questions, but none of them are answered because I'm so deeply, fundamentally confused. As your body parts fly across the train car, I struggle to keep my anger and vomit inside. I swear if one of those clippings lands on me, you will lose your entire hand.

Nail in the coffin

TO THE GIRL LOOKING AT BUZZFEED ON HER PHONE DURING THE ENTIRE RED SOX GAME: Why are you paying money for a ticket if you're not even going to enjoy the game? Buzzfeed isn't going anywhere after the game. Looking at animal gifs shouldn't be a higher priority than watching the Sox win.

TEMPTING SKATE:
Orchard Skateshop

ROOM AND BOARD

Ever since Orchard Skateshop opened in Mission Hill in 2006, it's established itself as an eclectic and unique destination for the Boston skateboarding community. But for its newest store in the Back Bay, Orchard went back to the drawing board. The new location at 297 Newbury St. might as well be the MFA of skateboard shops. "There are lots of different little details," says co-owner Armin Bachman. The showroom features a replica of Copley Fountain and a mosaic created from skateboard deck tiles made by the eco conscious skateboard brand Art of Board. There's also a window display built from wood reclaimed from a demolished Brighton home, created by the Boston artists' group Individuals Collective. Photos of skateboarders from the mid '90s further showcase the Hub's boarding heritage. "We've got a lot of pride for our city," Bachman says, stating the obvious. / Nick Hansen

SUGAR & SPICE:
McCrea's Candies

Purveyors: Candy Man

Jason McCrea is a scientist with a sweet tooth. The Hyde Park-based chemist-turned-confectioner started out as a caramel hobbyist experimenting in his home kitchen. Once he'd nailed a formula—and once his order numbers outgrew his saucepan—he invested in a kettle with a computer-regulated batch cooker. The machine produced his thick, velvety base caramel, allowing his small team (including his wife, Kate Michmerhuizen) to dream up more than a half-dozen flavors. Among them: Black Lava Sea Salt and smooth, smoky Highland Scotch. / Elizabeth Bomze

NICE SLICE: A4's bar

Good Eats: Dough Boys

The dough is made with the same sourdough starter chef/owner Michael Leviton developed for Cambridge's Area Four, and the style of pie—with the deep char traditional to a Neapolitan crust and the thin-but-sturdy structure of the New Haven kind—is familiar, too. What's different at A4, the mostly-pizza bar recently opened by Leviton, Michael Krupp and Jeff Pond near Union Square, is the oven, a custom-built clay dome fueled by wood. Also new are a few of the topping combinations, like the limited-edition corn and basil that gets its intense sweetness from a corn reduction and roasted onions. And the place has the feel of a neighborhood pizza joint (albeit a chic, hipster one), complete with half-price cold slices after 11 pm. / Elizabeth Bomze

Drink of the Moment
BLACKBERRY SIDECAR

PRICE: $14

INGREDIENTS: Remy Martin VSOP, Cointreau, lemon juice, simple syrup, plum bitters and six muddled blackberries. Garnish with two more blackberries, because you can never have too many vitamins in your booze.

BACKGROUND: The sidecar is one of the six primary cocktails, its origin stories variously citing its birthplace as Paris or London around the end of World War I. This recipe follows the classic one, except it's enlivened with bitters, syrup and fruit. Does it work? "We sold 58 last week," says Jake Lee, Ruth's Chris' bar manager.

FLAVOR: The nose is citrus, while the cognac's alcohol is softened by the gentle tang of the blackberries. Bitters flare up in the back, sharpening the fruit's aftertaste. "It's a very balanced drink," Lee says. "It has the sour with the lemon, the sweet with the fruit, and the bitters add a really nice component."

RUTH'S CHRIS STEAKHOUSE
45 School St., B
(617-742-8401)
ruthschris.com

ORDER IT AT: Curley's, the restaurant's opulent bar. It's named after the famous mayor, of course, since the steakhouse is located in the gracious Second Empire confines of the Old City Hall

USE IT TO TOAST: 19th-century civic architecture, and curse the brutalist 20th-century aesthetics of Government Center.

PAIR IT WITH: The drink's fruit profile would work with a salad or, more ambitiously, chicken breast stuffed with garlic-herb cheese.

ALTERNATIVES: If you're in a breakfast mood, try the ruby red greyhound, made with grapefruit vodka and laced with St. Germain. Also a big seller nowadays: the pomegranate martini, because you can never have too many antioxidants in your booze / Andrew Rimas

PAPER FLORAL SHIRT DRESS // $39.99
Every woman should have a shirt dress (or three) in her closet because they easily move between the office and a night out by just swapping accessories!

LEATHER JACKET // $249.99
Classic piece with a navy twist. I'm planning on pairing it with the shirt dress to add some toughness to the sweet floral print

LARGE TOTE BAG // $54.99
This tote is super roomy, plus it has handles and a strap so you can carry it in the crook of your arm (the blogger-preferred pose) or wear as an extra-large cross body.

THE OLD COLLEGE TRY

A HUMOROUS REFLECTION ON UNDERGRAD DAYS

THAT BOOK ABOUT HARVARD* by Eric Kester
Published by Sourcebooks, 352 pages, $15 paperback

This memoir is set in Cambridge.

GIVEN ITS GLOAT ABOUT BEING THE World's Greatest University, it's refreshing to read a book about Harvard by a witty, self-deprecating guy who sees himself as a goofball. In "Professor Phlegm's" calculus class, a 14-year-old genius outshines Kester, even while trying to join in on what he imagines, wrongly, is Kester's sexy college scene: "Slay some babes for me tonight," the boy says.

Then there's an eccentric Irish roommate whose language comes from some charmingly loony planet, and the classmate who tries to blackmail Kester by photographing him during a Harvard midnight streaking event. In one class, humorlessly intense feminists unfairly rake him over the coals. Kester bumbles girlfriend-seeking, football-playing, academics. He further embarrasses himself by getting locked out of his dorm and walking through the Yard in his underpants, always contrasting Harvard's big-headedness with his own amusing failures. From a one-down position, he gradually improves his view of Self vs. Harvard, and things develop interestingly on the love front. Like humorous little groundhogs, wry punchlines pop up on almost every page.

FROM PAGE 230: "You probably don't realize this, but when the Titanic sunk in 1912 Leonardo DiCaprio wasn't the only passenger who died. There were 1,517 other less-handsome victims, including a young Harvard graduate who tragically went down with the ship on that fateful night. The young Harvard man from Philadelphia, described by friends as an avid bibliophile (the term 'nerd' hadn't been invented yet), reportedly left his lifeboat and returned to his cabin in order to save a rare book from his precious collection. Harry Widener never made it back to the lifeboat." ■

The Escape Artist / Andrew Rimas

THE WINDHAM HILL INN'S CIVILIZED RUSTICITY

SOUTHERN VERMONT—DESPITE ITS MOWN greens, its bovine tranquility—has wild corners. There are spots, far from the interstate, where ancient Chevys rust on lawns that have never known a rake. Where pavement runs out. Where you can't buy groceries on a Sunday afternoon. But then you turn a corner and discover a Relais & Chateaux hotel with an educated wine list. Vermont just can't escape its inherent civilization.

The Windham Hill Inn roosts on the eastern slope of a postcard hillside; everywhere you look you see maples and photogenic geography. The original structure is a 19th-century country retreat in the gilded mode, all crisp paint, exposed beams and nooks with views of the fireplaces. Originally occupied by the Boston Lawrences, the property's retained its Brahmin gentility while adding skylights above the creaking floorboards. Walking up the path to the front door, you'll see a mountain vista surging to the right, while, to the left, vegetable patches ramble up the slope, flowering with the evening's side dishes. While you wait for your room, take a stroll among the berry bushes with a glass of iced mint tea, brewed from the garden's pickings.

The main house's guestrooms are New England plush—they've got writing desks, floral prints and names like "Miss Kate" or "May Lawrence." You can stretch out more expansively across the driveway in the White Barn, which has been converted into suites. Disregard the antique farmhouse feel of the entryway—the rooms are opulently modern, down to the gas fireplaces and Molton Brown bath products. Ask for the "Meadowlook" loft suite for a spectacular valley view, best absorbed from inside the deep soaking Kohler tub. There's a stone hearth and tartan wallpaper, while Vermont teddy bears add a twee accent to the rustic aesthetic. A private deck overlooks the lawn, and it's only a few steps to the outdoor heated pool and clay tennis court. But, again, it's got a deep soaking tub, so there's little reason to leave your room until mealtimes.

These, however, are an excellent excuse to rally. Afternoon tea and cookies are available in the main house's sunroom, and the pub lounge serves complimentary cocktails and local cheeses at 5:30 pm, but the most convincing argument to visit the Windham Hill Inn is the tasting menu. In a just world, if you googled "destination dining," you'd get an image of chef David Crone's lavender-honey-glazed duck breast paired with an Austrian rosé. Every upscale restaurant in rural New England makes a fuss about seasonal ingredients and the local sourcing of its chanterelle mushroom ragout. This is a given. Less expected is the painterly composition of a plate of veal tenderloin with sweetbreads and potato mousseline, graced with a glass of its soulmate nebbiolo/barbera blend from wine director Daniel Pisarczyk's cellar. The service here, too, balances between grace and friendliness, erring on the Vermonter's tendency to friendliness. Pay attention to the calendar of wine dinners, and consider scheduling your visit around the promise of, say, a killer Duckhorn Goldeneye pinot.

If you decide to earn your lemon meringue soufflé by hiking the grounds, pick up a map of the walking trails at the reception desk and follow it past the dining room windows, skirting the lively frog pond. The woods are enveloping, and the more challenging gradients lead to a stream at the base of the hill, which—mosquitoes permitting—yields an eventual waterfall. Less vigorous hikers should avoid the mud and strained calf muscles and circle around the upper trails. Wellington boots are available for damp excursions, as are showshoes for winter ones. Picnic lunches, too, can be requested from the kitchen, so you'll be provisioned for longer rovings.

But then you'd be missing out on your deep soaking Kohler tub. Vermont really is best enjoyed at its most civilized. ◆

GOOD SEEDS

AN OMNIVORE-WORTHY NEW ENTRY FOR ALLSTON'S VEGGIE BLOCK

ROOT

DESPITE A STEADILY GROWING AUDIENCE, vegetarian and vegan restaurants face a tough marketing challenge. Vegetarians and vegans still represent a tiny fraction of the American dining public (five and two percent, respectively). To be profitable, you need omnivores, but that crowd often thinks meatless means flavorless. One approach, favored by successful vegetarian food truck and restaurant chain Clover Food Lab, is simply to treat the V-words as taboo: Skip lectures on ethics, sustainability and health, and just let animal eaters discover that tacitly meatless food can be delicious. Following this tack, Root, a new counter-service Allston storefront, is entirely vegan, and entirely not going out of its way to advertise the fact. With the exception of one lonely dish, I suspect omnivores won't notice or care.

The sunny space has 18 table seats and four window-facing stools, with a few bright paintings and an array of bicycle wheels for decoration. Chalkboards list the modest lineup: half a dozen sandwiches and wraps, four salads, two sides, five fresh-juice beverages and five shaken beverages. Given the current mania for beef burgers, Root's menu wisely leads with its Root burger ($9), and it is splendid. There's excellent char and chew to the black-bean quinoa patty, topped by pristine Boston lettuce and tomato, a sprinkle of onion rings and a smear of garlicky eggless aioli, set inside a big, firm roll from the indispensable Iggy's. The accompanying fries are also gorgeous: hand-cut, crisp, flecked with fresh parsley, given a sheen with herbed olive oil and served with fine house-made ketchup. (They're also offered as a hefty side portion for $6.) It adds up to a killer plate, easily among the city's best veggie burgers.

The eggplant caprese sandwich ($9) is another beautiful pile-up: fat slices of eggplant fried in a crisp batter coating, thick-sliced tomato, fresh basil and a terrific thyme sauce based on pureed cashews, served in another Iggy's bun. The scaloppine-esque heft made me glad I opted for a side of simply dressed arugula and shredded carrots instead of fries; I can't recall many meatless sandwiches that felt so substantial. The sweet potato quesadilla ($7), listed as a "small bite" but deserving entrée status, layers skin-on sweet potato slices, sauteed red onion, and kale inside a tortilla nicely browned on the griddle, with that creamy thyme sauce on the side. I'd swear there's melted cheese in there, but there isn't; it's still a beauty.

Lighter in aspect if not much less filling is the Korean quinoa wrap ($9), a griddled whole-wheat tortilla wrapped around quinoa, diced portobello mushrooms, kale, red onions and sprouts. The genius touch is the liberal use of gochujang, the fiery/sweet, umami-rich Korean chili-based condiment, which rescues it from the sort of cliched vegan-restaurant blandness that meat-lovers dread. Salads offer perfect produce in attractively composed combinations of greens, vegetables, grains, legumes, nuts and fruits. Thai peanut salad ($5 small, $8 large) tops Boston lettuce with familiar ingredients from the sandwich board: portobellos, red onions, sprouts and pickled carrots, dusted with black sesame seeds and lots of peanuts. As in Thai restaurants, a coconut-cream peanut dressing makes the dish. The maple harvest salad ($4/$7) bedecks arugula with raisins, walnuts and tart green apple, again rising above ordinariness with sweet/tart maple vinaigrette. Diners wanting more starch can add a side of sweet corn and jalapeño hushpuppies ($6), five racquetball-sized fritters flecked with corn and rather muted chilies, tasty enough to make the ketchup and aioli dips almost superfluous.

Weekend brunch brings table service and more extraordinary sauces. Liège waffles ($8) boast yeasty, almost malty interiors from long batter fermentation, while the crisply browned exteriors feature caramelized bits of pearl sugar. They're good plain, but are elevated to dessert-for-breakfast status with a spiced pear/ginger sauce and sweetened coconut cream, beaten to resemble dense whipped cream. The homemade biscuit ($3) seems sad by comparison, a cold, leaden lump served with a dull mixed-oil oleo—the only dish that made me long for a side of smoky bacon.

Made-to-order juices ($6) offer 12 ounces of liquefied and strained fruits and vegetables in a mason jar. I'd struggle to choose between Root punch (beet, carrot, apple) and Green (cucumber, kale, green apple, lime) as the best combination of gorgeous color and vibrant flavor, but all made me feel energized and virtuous. The taller, less-intense shaken drinks include refreshers like orange gingerade ($3). You could imagine stopping by Root just to get these for takeout, like you would the vegan ice cream served by sibling FoMu a few doors down. As many vegans and vegetarians know, this block is also home to Grasshopper, a pan-Asian vegetarian restaurant, and Burmese eatery YoMa, which recently went mostly vegetarian. Those V-word people have already begun flocking to Root; will their meat-loving friends follow? If enough try the burger and fries, I'm guessing they will. ◆

Q: WHAT IS THE BEST WAY TO EXFOLIATE MY SKIN?

A: Exfoliation will remove dead skin cells and debris from your pores to freshen up your skin for a clean, healthy glow. There are many choices for a proper exfoliation.

At SkinHealth, we provide no fewer than three types of mechanical exfoliation and seven types of chemical exfoliation!

Mechanical exfoliation utilizes technology, in the form of microdermabrasion with either crystals or diamonds, or with ultrasonic energy combined with water. Chemical exfoliation, or chemical peels, involve the application of a peeling agent, such as glycolic, lactic, or salicylic acid to gently lift and dissolve dead skin cells.

These exfoliation treatments are safe and effective for all skin types. There is no downtime and they do not hurt. Time to get your glow-on!

Starring Olivia Wilde, Jake Johnson, Anna Kendrick, Ron Livingston and Jason Sudeikis. Written and directed by Joe Swanberg. At Kendall Square and On Demand

Movies / Sean Burns

TROUBLE BREWING

JOE SWANBERG'S DRINKING BUDDIES MAY CAUSE YOU TO KNOCK A FEW BACK.

With more than 20 directorial credits under his belt at just 32 years old, Joe Swanberg is the most staggeringly prolific filmmaker you've never heard of. He probably made another movie just in the time it took me to type that opening sentence. But don't feel too bad if you don't recognize the name, since Swanberg's DIY pictures tend to be fans-only affairs, microbudgeted curiosities popping up here and there on the festival circuit, where he remains a polarizing figure. Last year at Austin's FantasticFest, the director even got into a boxing ring and duked out aesthetic differences with one of his most vocal detractors, movie blogger Devin Faraci. (By all accounts, including Faraci's own, Swanberg beat the crap out of him.)

But he might have just broken through to the mainstream with Drinking Buddies, which spent the tail end of the summer doing bang-up business on VOD and is just now making its way to into theaters. On the surface, this looks like Swanberg's most accessible film to date, one made with real movie stars, actual money and a Hollywood hook: Olivia Wilde, Jake Johnson, Anna Kendrick and Ron Livingston star as a pair of mismatched couples, best friends secretly harboring feelings for one another as they drink too much while working at a Chicago craft brewery. Then you sit down to watch it and it turns out to be the same old Swanberg amateur hour.

I gave up on the filmmaker back when he was a regular fixture at the Independent Film Festival Boston, and at the forefront of a movement that for some reason became known as "mumblecore." After Boston's own Andrew Bujalski broke out with Funny Ha-Ha, fests were suddenly inundated with movies about inarticulate postgrads sorting through their banal relationship difficulties. The decreasing costs and increasing ease of digital technology meant that anybody could make a movie, so most of them did. Like

A friend joked the other day that the old axiom "write what you know" might be the most poisonous advice ever given to our generation. I wouldn't go that far, but I think "just because it happened to you doesn't make it interesting" is something more young artists need to keep in mind. Swanberg's early efforts were sexually explicit, though deeply unsexy, fits of intermittently amusing navel-gazing, ad-libbed on camera by his friends playing variations on themselves, elevated by the occasional presence of a pre-stardom Greta Gerwig.

Drinking Buddies steers clear of the filmmaker's penchant for blunt sexuality, presumably a concession to the Hollywood cast. But otherwise it's more of the same. Improvised from an outline instead of a script, it's an indifferently photographed chronicle of passive-aggressive behavior by people who have nothing particularly interesting to say.

Olivia Wilde and Jake Johnson are doing that best-friends-who-really-belong-together thing that already felt moldy back when John Hughes was working it in the '80s. Except she's with the weary Livingston and he's in a relationship that makes no sense whatsoever with the younger, sprightly Kendrick. This latter couple has such communication problems that they euphemistically, hypothetically talk about when they're going to make plans to talk about their future. Meanwhile, Johnson walks around dressed and groomed suspiciously like Swanberg's nemesis, Faraci.

A camping trip and a stolen kiss set the whole dynamic on its ear, but in such a muted, low-key way that it's hard to notice. Drinking Buddies is the kind of movie you start to forget while you're still watching it. According to Swanberg partisans, his technique strips away the artifice and cuts to human truth. I would argue that if you strip away things like camera placement, scene construction and dialogue writing, you've just stripped away everything that is cinema, leaving you with a glorified home video.

When John Cassavetes called his movies "improvisations," it was because he spent weeks in advance going through the story scene-by-scene with the cast, working them out as a group and carefully assembling scripts from the discoveries they made together. Mike Leigh works the same way. Watching something like Drinking Buddies, I wonder how arrogant you have to be to just show up on the set and expect a movie to magically happen when you push the record button.

This is a giant nothing. I can't think of a recent picture where I've seen less effort to enlighten or entertain. Hell, I didn't even learn anything about making beer. Drinking Buddies has been all over iTunes' list of the most downloaded movies since it became available in late July. I'd like them to release the data on how many people actually finished watching it. ◆

A PIXIEISH WOMAN SADDLES UP TO THE bar, takes a few swigs from a beer bottle, and goes from tapping her fingers to dancing on top of the counter. That's singer Kat Edmonson in the video for an airy rendition of "I Don't Know" from her artful, endearing 2012 album Way Down Low.

"Some of my fans view me as a very innocent creature, and I'm only human," the sweet-voiced Edmonson, 30, says with a laugh. "They were shocked to see me drinking a beer!"

Granted, Edmonson won't be dancing on tables at the Regattabar on Sept. 19, though her last local shows were in rock clubs rather than jazz rooms, her music floating between those genres. Her jazzy, romantic tunes most closely echo the sound of an earlier era. She cites Frank Sinatra, Bing Crosby, Nat King Cole, Tony Bennett, Judy Garland and Gene Kelly among her favorite singers.

Edmonson's video for "I Don't Know" could even be a scene from one of those 1940s/1950s musicals that she watched on VHS tape as a child growing up in Houston, instilled with a love of the Great American Songbook by her mother. "She was a single mom, working all the time, and needed me to be preoccupied, so she'd play me musicals," Edmonson says. "I learned them and very much fantasized that my adulthood would one day look like what these musicals were."

Adult fantasies took a different spin when she auditioned for American Idol at age 19. "I didn't know how to get into the music business," Edmonson says, "and that seemed like a viable way." She made it to Hollywood before Idol judge Randy Jackson dismissed Edmonson by saying that she didn't look like a star. "Once I left, it made sense to pursue a more typical musical career," she says, "getting a gig in a club, meeting other musicians, writing songs."

She moved to Texas' music-savvy capital of Austin, following her dream while also working as a waitress, accountant, telemarketer and nanny. Edmonson says she quit her last day job in a real estate office after a co-worker suggested that no one would take her seriously as a singer otherwise, and she appreciated the need to hustle. "I was playing for peanuts, playing for meals," she says, "but in a very short amount of time, I was actually making more money doing music."

"I actually have a lot of older friends—senior citizens who share the same interests—and I fear that I might feel all alone at some point."

With her girlish tone and deft phrasing, honed solely from listening to vocalists on records, the untrained Edmonson grew through a residency at Austin's Elephant Room. She recorded her 2009 debut Take to the Sky, recasting standards from Cole Porter's "Night and Day" to the Cure's "Just Like Heaven," and shared stages with Willie Nelson and Lyle Lovett, who duets on Way Down Low.

To help fund that album, Edmonson turned to the crowd-sourcing platform Kickstarter. "I was hesitant to do it in the beginning because I was proud, and I thought it would take away from the mystery," she says. "But this is a different age, and it made it possible to become closer with my fans."

Among those fans was Grammy-winning recording engineer Al Schmitt (Ray Charles, Steely Dan), who helmed Way Down Low. The album introduces such timeless Edmonson originals as "Nobody Knows That" and "Champagne," while her wistful reworking of Brian Wilson's Pet Sounds gem "I Just Wasn't Made for These Times" inhabits that sentiment as a statement of purpose.

"I wonder when I'm older and all the people who I admire are gone, who might I relate to, because my peers and people who are younger than me usually don't know the music that I'm referencing, from the movies or any of these bygone eras," Edmonson says. "I actually have a lot of older friends—senior citizens who share the same interests—and I fear that I might feel all alone at some point."

For now, she's happy to be living in New York. "I never feel alone here," she says. "I feel so warmly surrounded by all these beautiful buildings and parks, in this place that so many of the great people who came before me lived and worked." And maybe even danced on the top of a bar. ◆

STANDING ON CEREMONY

SCENES FROM A VERY UN-BOSTON WEDDING

ALMOST EVERYONE'S BEEN TO DOZENS OF weddings, perhaps hundreds. We've all witnessed unions that we felt were doomed, only to see them survive for years. Others we felt were eternally blessed would blow up in acrimony in a relatively short time. We never really know what goes on behind closed doors.

Wedding season rolls on all year it seems, certainly into the autumn. And increasingly the young people, the bride and groom, call the shots, not the parents. How many weddings have you all been to in the past several years on Memorial Day, July Fourth, Labor Day weekends? This annoys the hell out of many of the guests, increasing the pressure on their own marriages.

A recent wedding taught me a lesson that, as Bostonians, we should all think about. People act and celebrate life differently in different parts of the country. This particular wedding was at a country club that was out of a John O'Hara or an F. Scott Fitzgerald novel: old and elegant, dressed up and appearing as if it were out of the 1920s. The groom's family and friends all came from California and the Midwest, particularly Chicago, with a sprinkling of Wisconsin Badgers. Many of the young people had gone to college in California at Santa Clara University. All I knew about Santa Clara was that it was always a hotbed of great swimming, going back to Don Schollander and the Santa Clara swim club, famous for success in the Olympics.

Boston is a tribal town. The diversity, the grit and the grudges make us what we are. Our city is really all about three things that most strangers never understand: politics, sports and revenge. Memories go deep in this city, so I'm always on the lookout for anything pure. Who's pure in this town, or who was? Bobby Orr, Ted Williams, Larry Bird, James Michael Curley, Kevin White, John Sears the Brahmin, Norman Leventhal, Michael Maso at the Huntington. Not so many of recent vintage—Dustin Pedroia, Jim O'Connell of Boston Health Care for the Homeless, Josh Kraft of the Boys and Girls Clubs, the late Joan Parker. You can make your own list. But these are people with no hidden agendas, pure in their intensities.

Which brings me back to this wedding, which was pure in a very non-Boston way. No grit, no irony, no sarcasm, no avoiding the dance floor, no heading for the exits the minute the cake is cut. There was no second- and third-guessing at this wedding, no jockeying for position, no prearranged seating, no ceremony officiated by someone who got a special license for one day. At one wedding, for an usher's gift I received a pewter beer tankard from Shreve's. On one side was engraved the wedding date and the Latin phrase "ius prima nocte." Translated it means "Right of the first night." The phrase goes back to medieval times and nods to the right of the local lord of the manor to have the first night with the bride of any of his serfs. Harsh, even for the Middle Ages.

There was no second- and third-guessing at this wedding, no jockeying for position, no prearranged seating, no ceremony officiated by someone who got a license for one day.

For entertainment, the Boston band Eye 2 Eye, fronted by the singer Penni Layne, played nonstop country and western from Jason Aldean to Lady Antebellum. Everyone—grandparents, parents and all of the young 'uns—stomped and sang at the top of their lungs. I haven't seen such unbridled joy since a drunken stockbrokers convention in Scottsdale, Ariz., back in the '80s.

Boston weddings are generally somewhat predictable. Loving and lovely, yes. Great toasts and conversation, yes. Plenty of grit and political and cultural conversation, sure. I've been to weddings with fistfights, tables turned over, a guest driving a Volvo through the giant tent, guests dumping on the parents and the relative poverty of various relatives. That's the grit of Boston weddings, the home of so much that is tribal, lost in the past. But there's virtually never fiddles and stompin'. John Wayne, Johnny Cash and John Deere in Boston?

It all made me think that every one of us, once in a while, should get out of our comfort zones. See how other people live and play and realize that, occasionally, for brief moments, all can be happiness and joy. ■

OUT OF SITE

MY FEUD WITH TRAVELOCITY

I'M SITTING AT LOGAN WITH A FEW MINUTES to kill before boarding, so I decide to take care of a chore and book a flight for a trip I'm taking next month. I get out my phone, open a few windows on Travelocity, figure out an itinerary and press purchase. By the time I check the confirmation email, I realize that I made a big boo-boo. With three or four windows open, there was one where I neglected to enter a date on the very first page. And that's the one I bought. The flight took off the same afternoon I bought it. Bye bye, $356.30.

If you're not familiar with Travelocity, the name is a combination of the words "travel" and "atrocity." Its mascot is a hateful little gnome who wears a red Ku Klux Klan hat. According to the Wikipedia entry that I'm about to write, Travelocity began as an online message board for people who are sexually aroused by My Little Pony. Now you're up to speed about this fine organization.

Naturally, I call Travelocity to plead for mercy. And I'm pretty sure that the woman sitting in her Bangalore cubicle at 2 am really feels bad about my plight. A hint of satisfaction creeps into her voice when, after checking with US Airways, she confirms that I will not have a $200 change fee. Because a change fee would represent some form of recourse, and I have none. The flight left, partner.

Now, I acknowledge that I should've been more careful. I made a dumb mistake. But people botch reservations all the time. Normally you can catch an error before a flight takes off, but that's hard to do when you inadvertently book a trip that takes off within hours of purchasing it. Why, I wondered, would Travelocity let you book a trip without picking a date?

A Travelocity spokesperson informs me that, after consulting with the company's developers, it turns out that I'm simply the biggest idiot ever to use Travelocity. "Honestly, you're the first person who has brought this to our attention," he writes. "We don't see any reason to change how the dates are presented for flights." OK, here's a reason: Your own website, the full-fledged non-mobile one, has no default dates—you actually have to specify a date before you buy the ticket. So why, then, is the mobile site optimized for people who are on their way to the airport, fleeing extradition?

To that question, the official Travelocity response is "Na-na na-na boo-boo, stick your head in doo-doo." Actually, it was "Our mobile team has simply concluded that for our mobile sites it is better to auto-select calendar dates for the same day." Again, I'm a dummy, because I don't see why it's better. It just is. Another fun quirk is that if you give Travelocity your location—and of course they'll interrupt a booking to ask for that—the site will let you book a physically impossible itinerary. So you're in Boston booking a one-way flight out of Moscow in three hours? Bon voyage and congratulations on bending the space-time continuum.

If Travelocity comes across as an outfit that's preoccupied with bigger problems than me, that's because it is. Rarely do you get to see an adversarial company go down in flames immediately after a sour experience, but when I go to Twitter to check out other Travelocity gripes—and there are plenty—I also find a recent Bloomberg Businessweek story about how Travelocity is totally doomed. The story begins with the line "It may be too soon to bury Travelocity, but it appears an opportune time to write its obituary." Oh, please, let me help with that.

"It may be too soon to bury Travelocity, but it appears an opportune time to write its obituary." Oh, please, let me help with that.

It seems Travelocity Town has a new mayor named Expedia, which moved in because Travelocity "has seen a sharp drop in traffic in recent years." According to Bloomberg, soon all that will remain of Travelocity is its marketing, which is to say a garden gnome with a dunce cap. But don't worry, Travelocity, it's gonna be better this way. You'll see.

I spent $7,000 on Travelocity last year, and I can say definitively that $356.30 is my final charge for this lifetime. As for where I'm gonna go now, I don't know. What I do know is that Travelocity's sucker-punch mobile site might be in for a change, whether they like it or not. Expedia, you see, also sets a default date—but at least it's a day in advance. You get three steps toward the door, dummies.

Not that it matters. I'm done booking flights on my phone. Who am I, Mr. Busy Guy over here? Buy! Sell! I need that flight yesterday! What? It actually took off yesterday? Oops. ■

THE ACTOR TELLS US ABOUT NICKNAMES, FREAKY FANS AND BEING THE MAN.

BREAKOUT TV STAR Pooch Hall, 36, stars alongside Liev Schreiber in the hit Showtime series Ray Donovan. He's also known for his portrayal of a wide receiver on the CW/BET comedy series The Game, and as Ricky in the 2011 film Jumping the Broom. A Brockton native and graduate of Brockton High, Hall attended UMass Dartmouth, where he met his wife, Linda (now a realtor in L.A.). A trained boxer, he won the Southern New England Golden Gloves in 1994. After modeling for several years, he began his professional acting career by landing a small role in the independent feature Lift, going on to roles in the films Black Cloud, Blind Dating and Stomp The Yard 2: Homecoming. On the small screen, Hall worked on the CBS series Accidentally on Purpose and had recurring roles on Suits and Warehouse 13 for Syfy. He and his wife live in Los Angeles with their three children.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Let's talk about names. Where did Pooch come from?
POOCH HALL: It started off as Pookie when I was born, but my Dad, being from down South, he started calling me Pooch.

So is your spirit animal a dog? No, no. I'd say if I was gonna come back, I'd come back as a velociraptor.

Why did you get into boxing as a kid? I grew up in Brockton. It was a tough city, and my father boxed in the Army. He always wanted me and my brother and sister to be able to take care of ourselves, and he didn't want us fighting in the streets. He wanted us fighting in the ring.

You play a character named Derwin on The Game. I'd kill myself if my name was Derwin. [Laughs] People act like that's my name for real. I don't even answer to Pooch anymore. People on the street are like, "Yo, Derwin! What's goin' on with The Game?" So on the show, I was originally known as "Rookie." Then, when they brought on the coach, he started calling me "Ding-Dong."

My favorite thing on The Game is that Brandy plays a bartender named Chardonnay Pitts. Oh, yeah. Well, I think it's their way of keeping the comedy going and keeping it relatable to us black people, because sometimes we name our kids weird names. Matiqua. Shaquanda...

If you could have one endorsement deal in your life, what would it be? Nike. On the show, my character gets an endorsement deal with them, and they did an actual campaign.

Is Liev Schreiber totally badass? That cat is bad to the fing bone.

Could you take him in an arm-wrestling match? We'd probably be there for a while, because he's no softy and neither am I. But I'd probably use the over-the-top Stallone technique to take him down, 'cause he's a great athlete and very strong.

"Let's just say that if Pooch and Liev Schreiber walked in, we'd probably both have to be escorted out."

So who would win in a bar fight? Let's just say that if Pooch and Liev Schreiber walked in, we'd probably both have to be escorted out.

Who's the boxer you'd most like to play in a movie? Probably Roy Jones. I couldn't play Ali, because Will Smith already owns it. I don't think Roy Jones has been done yet, and I'm not really a heavyweight.

Who do people confuse you with on the street? Cuba Gooding Jr. People say we could be related. I don't see it, but people tend to compare me to him.

You're married to your college sweetheart. Are you glad you found your soulmate before you found fame? I get approached by some of the craziest women, and I think, "As freaky as you are and I guess it's kind of a turn-on, I could never see you as my wife." I want my wife to be respectable, and I don't want my relationship out in public. I want it to be private, with a woman as beautiful and smart and kind and good as my wife.

So what was the freakiest fan encounter you've had? Oh, girls telling me they don't have panties on. A girl whipped out her boob for me to sign.

Stomp the Yard 2*—unfairly overlooked by the Academy? [Laughs] Absolutely! I actually got hurt during that project. I pulled a hamstring trying to learn those moves. I didn't have a stunt double, either, so in one part of the film, you can see me creeping away. I hate to admit it, but it's true. In the big battle scene, too. The showdown. They didn't give us enough time...or as much money. I wanted to look better than Usher and Michael Jackson, and instead, I'm limping away.

Any role you regret doing? I don't want to downplay anything, but I kinda regret doing a commercial with Buddylee the dog. I look like his sidekick. I got upstaged by a dog.

While you were making Black Cloud, did you and my buddy Julia Jones bond over the Boston connection? We did! I was so happy to see her in the Twilight series, because she is a great person. Gorgeous, too, and I remember having a conversation with her where she said, "All I'm going out for are Indian roles. I need something to get me out of the rut." Now she's in one of the biggest franchises.

What was your worst modeling gig? Probably a fashion show at the Swansea Mall. It paid like 150 bucks, but all the cool kids were making fun of us. But what ended up happening is that someone saw me there and hooked me up with an agent in New York, and things took off from there. So in retrospect, it was probably the best 150 bucks I ever made.

What three words do you think your wife would use to describe you? [Laughs] Stubborn. Goofy. And sexy.

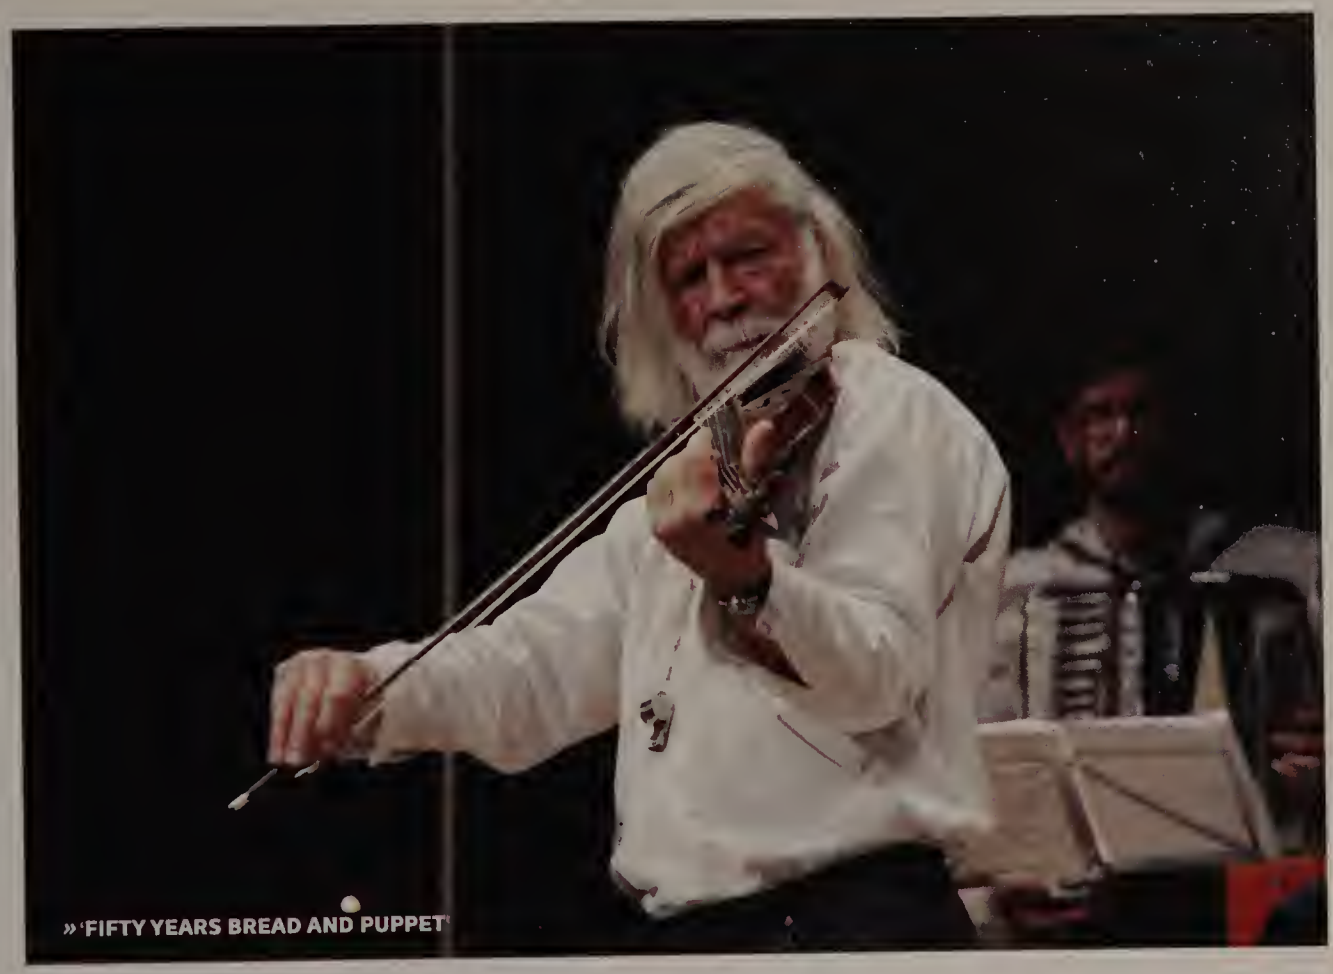
Relax, Nothings OK.
Try not to think about it.

PLAN OF ACTION

A curated guide to Boston's bountiful arts events

By Jonathan Soroff



OUR CITY HAS A MILLION CULTURAL TREASURES, SO IT'S EASY TO GET LOST IN THE DAZZLE

We picked the most sparkling arts events for our weekend calendar, guaranteed to keep you busy until the holidays.

BOB ODENKIRK AND DAVID CROSS AT THE SHUBERT THEATRE

These two comedy all-stars paired up to write a new book—HOLLYWOOD SAID NO! Orphaned Film Scripts, Bastard Scenes, and Abandoned Darlings from the Creators of Mr. Show—and are hosting a book-signing and stand-up comedy tour, performing together for the first time since their sold-out national tour in 2002. Fans of Arrested Development and The Increasingly Poor Decisions of Todd Margaret will be there to see Cross, while Breaking Bad and Tim and Eric Awesome Show, Great Job! aficionados will be there for Odenkirk. Together, they're some kind of hysterical, and it's a guaranteed ab workout. The uninitiated should stream episodes of Mr. Show, the HBO series that SNL alum Odenkirk and the wildly inventive Cross created, mixing live sketches with taped segments and featuring comics like Sarah Silverman, Jack Black and Brian Posehn, who appears with them in Boston.

» "FIFTY YEARS BREAD AND PUPPET"

» Backup Plan

"Fifty Years Bread and Puppet: Cheap Art and Political Theater," Sept. 14, 9 am to 9 pm, Boston College, breadandpuppet.org. A daylong celebration of the theater's five-decade history, along with a "fiddle lecture" by founder Peter Schumann. Registration required.

Tickets

An Evening With Bob & David (and Posehn), Sept. 13 at 7:30 pm, Citi Performing Arts Center's Shubert Theatre, $39.50–$49.50

Shubert Theatre 270 Tremont St., Boston (888-348-9738) citicenter.org/theatres/shubert

Weekend of SEPTEMBER 20

A.R.T.'S ALL THE WAY

Breaking Bad star Bryan Cranston portrays LBJ, the president who was ushered in by an assassin's bullet. Capturing all of Lyndon Johnson's Texas grit, humor, irreverence and profanity, the play—written by Pulitzer Prize winner Robert Schenkkan—covers the president's first year in office, when he tackled the paradigm-changing Civil Rights Act. The sticky question of means vs. ends provides the fulcrum for the drama, which offers a glimpse back to a time when a black president was an impossibility, as well as offering eerie echoes of today's bitterly bipartisan squabbling over social issues. As if Cranston weren't enough of an attraction, the production also features The Piano Lesson's Brandon J. Dirden as the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., Michael McKean as J. Edgar Hoover, and House of Cards' Reed Birney as Hubert Humphrey. Gird yourself for strong language and racial epithets.

SHE WHO TELLS A STORY AT THE MUSEUM OF FINE ARTS

Despite the political tension and harsh day-to-day realities, the Middle East's powder keg continues to produce thought-provoking, evocative and challenging artwork, and this photography exhibit introduces the groundbreaking work of 12 women from Iran and the Arab world. The images run the gamut from photo-journalistic to highly stylized and manipulated, and they explore themes of gender, war and peace, and everyday life, all the while confronting Western notions about women from their part of the world, their roles in society and questions of equality. A more soulful glimpse into the Muslim world than you'll find in any newspaper, these photographs represent the humanity behind the headlines.

SHE WHO TELLS A STORY

Backup Plan

The Berklee BeanTown Jazz Festival, Sept. 28, 12 to 6 pm, Columbus Ave. between Mass. Ave. and Burke St., Boston, beantownjazz.org. This year, the free outdoor fest's theme is Jazz: The Next Generation, so expect lots of rising stars, plus 10-time Grammy nominee Meshell Ndegeocello.

THE JUNGLE BOOK

Weekend of
OCTOBER 4

THE HUNTINGTON THEATRE'S THE JUNGLE BOOK

The Huntington Theatre Company's win of the 2013 Tony Award for Regional Theatre will make this a tough ticket to come by, but the new reimagining of Rudyard Kipling's classic story collection and the Disney film gives Mowgli the full Simba treatment. The New York Times, Variety, Entertainment Weekly and The Chicago Sun-Times have already dubbed it a classic, and since the show just premiered, this is an opportunity to see it before most theater buffs. "Candy for the eyes," as one critic put it, it's kid-friendly but not adult-toxic, and the show's Bollywood-meets-Broadway sensibility gives it an irresistible zest. The colors alone are worth the price of admission. Consider it a passport back to childhood.

Backup Plan

ArtWeek Boston, various locations, Boston (617-482-9393) citicenter.org. Taking cues from Restaurant Week, the inaugural ArtWeek offers curated cultural experiences all across town at three [illegible] price points: free, $20.13 and $40.13.

Tickets

The Jungle Book, The Huntington Theatre Company, $25-$135

BÉLA FLECK

» BOSTON BOOK FESTIVAL 2013

» THINK PINK EXHIBIT

Weekend of OCTOBER 11

BÉLA FLECK'S BANJO SUMMIT

His parents sure were prescient: Named in honor of composer Béla Bartók, Béla Fleck has likewise achieved musical greatness. This concert kicks off the weekend with the man widely considered to be the world's best banjo player, performing bluegrass, country, jazz, classical and rock tunes inside Sanders Theatre, the most beautiful theater in Cambridge. The Celebrity Series can always be relied on to showcase the very finest talent, and Fleck—who spent some formative years playing in Boston—performs with virtuosos like Bill Keith, Eric Weissberg, Noam Pikelny, Richie Stearns and Tony Trischka. Special guest Abigail Washburn is an added bonus. If you think banjo is strictly for hillbillies, think again—and if your toes aren't tapping after the first song, you might want to have your hearing checked.

Backup Plan

Girl Rising* screening, Oct. 10, 6 pm, MCLE Auditorium, 10 Winter Place, Boston. bostonglow.org. This documentary, narrated by actresses including Meryl Streep and Kerry Washington, features stories of nine girls from across the globe.

Weekend of OCTOBER 18

ARMITAGE GONE! DANCE AT THE ICA

This is an opportunity to see the woman who numerous critics view as the true heir of the two 20th-century masters of choreography, George Balanchine and Merce Cunningham. Known as the "punk ballerina," Karole Armitage was classically trained and danced with the Grand Theatre Ballet Company in Geneva (which is devoted solely to the works of Balanchine), and then with Cunningham's company before founding her own. Recently nominated for a Tony for her brilliant choreography of Hair, she draws on wildly diverse sources. The program opens with Ligeti Essays, set to song cycles by the great Hungarian composer, and it continues with Rave, "a celebratory happening" for 26 dancers—18 of whom will be Boston Conservatory students—combining dance, capoeira, voguing, Chinese martial arts, catwalk, iconic costumes and body paint. Prepare to be dazzled, and be forewarned—this performance features nudity.

FORM, COLOR, BALANCE: RECENT WORKS BY MARK DAVIS AT THE PUCKER GALLERY

Since 1967, this Newbury Street gallery has showcased the work of some of the world's finest and foremost contemporary artists, and Mark Davis is no exception. A resident of Roslindale, he's a latter-day Alexander Calder who's entirely self-taught. After starting out as a sculptural jeweler, Davis has grown into a widely sought-after sculptor of mobiles that range from private commissions to public works, and this show highlights his deft use of organic shapes to form kinetic pieces that actually seem to breathe. The more than 40 pieces in this exhibit are superb examples of the artist's ability to define space through form, and in them you can catch glimpses of the masters who have influenced him, among them Matisse, Klee, Arp and Miro. After taking in the exhibit, park yourself at a cafe for a cocktail as you dream of the places in your home where you'd love to install a piece of Davis' work.

LA BAYADÈRE

JOHN OLIVER

Weekend of

BOSTON BALLET'S LA BAYADÈRE

After triumphant tours of London and D.C., Boston has proved that it's home to one of the world's top ballet companies. Boston Ballet's production of the Russian classic about a beautiful temple dancer in ancient India and her doomed love affair with her warrior-lover is the ideal material for a romantic night on the town. The Ludwig Minkus score is a refreshing change of pace from all the more familiar ballet music, and the choreography by Florence Clerc is mesmerizing. Throw in the dazzling sets and costumes, and it's clear that artistic director Mikko Nissinen has hit yet another home run during this, the company's 50th season. As the song says, "Everything was beautiful at the ballet," and this production proves the point.

GARY CLARK JR. AT ROYALE

He killed at Bonnaroo in 2011. He's played at Clapton's Crossroads concert. He's been dubbed "the future of Texas blues" but draws from the past, present and future to create an idiom purely his own. His loose-limbed playing pairs perfectly with a mellow vocal style that nevertheless packs a punch. If Jimi Hendrix and Jerry Garcia had a Texas lovechild, this Austin native would be him. At home, his shows are standing-room only. Here, you get to see him belting out tunes from last year's Blak and Blu release in the intimacy of a club with great sightlines. Catch him while he's still on the ascent and tickets aren't impossible to come by.

JOHN OLIVER AT THE WILBUR THEATRE

We love you, Jon Stewart, and we always will. But your summer replacement as host of The Daily Show caught our eye, and we're excited to see him in person. With Emmy and Writer's Guild nominations under his belt, Oliver's been the helium in the satirical podcasts and radio shows Political Animal and The Bugle. The perfect intersection of high- and low-brow British humor (he's from a middle-class family from Birmingham but graduated from Christ's College, Cambridge), he's a tightly wrapped package of surgical wit and searing insights. Here's your opportunity to see him before he blows up into the Second Coming of Stephen Colbert.

The SHOW MUST GO ON

With funding low, Boston theater looks for new ways to shine.

By Lindsay Tucker
Photography by Adam DeTour

STANDING ON STAGE AT

the 67th annual Tony Awards, the glow of Broadway lights framing her face, Diane Paulus held her newest prize. Winner of the award for best direction of a musical for her circus-themed revival of Pippin, the 47-year-old artistic director of the American Repertory Theater looked calm and authoritative as she leaned in toward the mic. She wore the expression of someone at ease among the glitterati, but she was far from home. She thanked the American Theatre Wing and all the Tony voters. She thanked her staff. And then she thanked the people of Boston, for embracing the production from its inception.

This tribute isn't the only recognition Boston-area theater has garnered recently on the national stage. Along with Pippin (which took the Tony for best revival of a musical, as well), the A.R.T.'s The Glass Menagerie made the jump to Broadway this spring, while the area's other leading theater, the Huntington—whose highly anticipated production of The Jun[illegible] Bug premiered this month—nabbed the Regional Theatre Tony. There's freshness emerging, and Boston's theater scene has put at least one foot under the national spotlight.

Sort's ironic that, despite massive accomplishments and recognition, funding for theater companies is as big a problem as ever. Although it's the hub of one the country's biggest metropolitan areas, Boston falls among the bottom five U.S. cities in annual arts spending. Those involved in performing arts find it tough to make a living wage here, and theater companies and nonprofit performing arts organizations are constantly on the lookout for innovative ways to raise capital. What's more, it seems the ongoing mayoral race could really make or break the sustainability of a theater scene on the cusp of vitality.

It's true, Boston is a far cry from the pre-Broadway tryout town it was when commercial theater ruled supreme and shows like Funny Girl and Anything Goes were tested in front of audiences here before debuting in the Big Apple. In those days, the Broadway shadow choked out the little guys, and hardly anything was happening at a local level. Julie Hennrikus, executive director of StageSource, a Boston-based service organization for theater groups and artists, says that in the past few decades, all that has changed. Regional players like the A.R.T. and the Huntington have laid the groundwork for smaller theaters in the community, creating a farm system for local artists to move up through. "There's been an explosion in the small and fringe [theater] community in Boston in the past 10 years or so," she says. "It is rich, bold, vibrant and interesting, and in many ways, one of the best-kept cultural secrets in Boston."

Spiro Veloudos was on the forefront of this movement. As producing artistic director for the Lyric Stage, a midsize, homegrown theater company that turns 40 this year, he's spent the past decade nurturing Boston-based actors and writers, rather than bringing in folks from other cities. Since then, companies like the Huntington have joined the movement. "When you make a commitment to artists in the city, the community can really grow," says Peter DuBois, the Huntington's artistic director. "There's not fairy dust on the artists in New York. [At the Huntington] we're developing our local talent pool and merging them with what we find in other cities."

Despite this tremendous growth from the ground level, public funding for the arts has been low across the boards—in theater, it's been practically nonexistent. As Michael Maso, managing director at the Huntington explained, most nonprofit theater companies survive on an amalgam of donations from independent and corporate donors, with only a tiny portion coming in from government funds. "Most companies are subsidized by the labor of the people who run them," he says. "Five or six companies have salaried employees, but not many. And that's a hard leap to make."

Americans for the Arts, a Washington D.C.-based service organization, tracks the amount of local government arts funding awarded to city arts agencies, in our case the Mayor's Office of Arts, Tourism, and Special Events. But Randy Cohen, the VP of research and policy, says that for the past five years, Boston's office has failed to provide any data at all. (When asked by The Improper, the Mayor's press office failed to produce such information or comment as to why it hasn't been submitted.) "What I can tell you," Cohen says, "is that Boston's competition cities—San Francisco, Chicago, New York and Philadelphia—are funding at much higher levels."

SUM OF ALL TEARS: Local government funding for Boston's office of the arts was $1.6 million in 2007.

To illustrate this, Cohen sent me a 10-year history of local-government support to city arts agencies for each of the country's 60 largest cities. In 2007, the last year Boston submitted numbers, roughly $1.6 million in government support was awarded to the office of the arts: Chicago offered $16.5 million to its arts department the same year; New York, $152.5 million; San Francisco, $10 million. (Philadelphia reported a much lower number of $10,000, but received a tremendous boost to funding after 2007, with numbers topping $3.9 million in 2010.)

But even when funding is available from the city or state, it's often allocated to large, well-known institutions. A quick look at the grant list issued by the Massachusetts Cultural Council for 2014 reveals that out of the 130 arts grants given to Boston organizations, a meager 16 of them went to institutions related to local and regional theater. Where the Boston Children's Theatre received a $2,500 grant, the Boston Children's Museum got $55,000. The MFA, the Museum of Science, the Aquarium, the Ballet, and the Symphony were all awarded grants of $55,000, while small to midsize theater companies, including the Commonwealth Shakespeare Company, Company One, and the Lyric Stage, received between $2,000 and $12,300 each.

Company One artistic director Shawn LaCount is hopeful that this could change. "Once the city sees the economic value of supporting arts and culture, Boston might just become a world-class theater city," he says.

Other industry veterans like Hennrikus and Veloudos say the theater community needs creative solutions to financing, and new measurements for success, because the funding simply doesn't exist. Even as the economy slowly improves, donors aren't showing up in the same capacity that they were before 2008. DuBois says crowdsourcing with platforms like Kickstarter—or simply allowing the public to sponsor small production elements like props or scenery—could possibly be a solution. "We're competing against sports and big concert tours," DuBois says. "Theater needs to embrace its scrappy side and start thinking in guerilla ways: How are we gonna make our numbers?"

That's a question that Diane Paulus has been all too familiar with since her tenure began in 2008 at the A.R.T. in Cambridge. While Paulus' critics have slammed her for the perceived "commercialization" of the Harvard-affiliated theater with the addition of club stage Oberon, it can be argued that it's productions like The Donkey Show, Paulus' interactive Studio 54 variation on Shakespeare's A Midsummer Night's Dream, that bring in streams of new revenue to augment the A.R.T.'s budget, while providing an incubator for the Hub's artists. "With Oberon we were able to make one of our venues a hothouse for local companies to try out," Paulus says. "And we're reaching new audiences through a new setting."

Perhaps an abandoning of convention is exactly what the arts community needs. "Chances are you won't make a living wage solely as a playwright," says Hennrikus, who held a conference in June with the theme of reframing success. "So why don't we instead think about what we do contribute, and how great it is? Embrace the fact that we might have to have two or three jobs to figure stuff out. But how blessed are we to be able to do the work?"

> "Boston's competition cities—San Francisco, Chicago, New York and Philadelphia—are funding at much higher levels."

Award-winning Boston-based actor Johnny Lee Davenport is less idealistic. In 2007, when he first arrived in town in as a cast member of the Actors' Shakespeare Project's Hamlet, his colleague Rick Lombardo, then producing artistic director of Watertown's New Repertory Theatre, told him he'd never make a living here as a wage stage-actor. And although Davenport is one of the few who has defied this logic, he admits that money is a problem. "The salaries are so low," he says, citing that most of the smaller companies he works for can only pay $371 a week.

Speaking of salaries, Americans for the Arts recently issued a local arts agency salary report for 2013. It looked at the seven regions of the country and provided arts-salary averages for each. It concluded that despite the cost of living here, New England arts employees' salaries ranked among the lowest in the nation—only slightly above those in the South Central and Middle Atlantic regions. According to the same report, executive directors of arts agencies in New England will make an average of $59,294 this year, by far the lowest of all the regions.

So what are we to do? We have a world-class city with a vibrant, creative theater community—one we're told is thriving despite lack of funding and support. Where do the arts fit into our city's future?

For starters, it's critical that arts be part of the conversation in the ongoing mayoral race in order for theater to prosper. That's why Hennrikus and other members of MassCreative's initiative "Create the Vote," which has been registering "arts voters" and raising awareness since May, organized the Boston Mayoral Candidate Forum on Arts, Culture, and Creativity for Sept. 9, asking candidates to share their visions or plans for the arts going forward. The forum came under threat in August when a second mayoral debate, organized by The Boston Herald, NECN and Suffolk University was announced for the same night and time. (After many candidates came forward and said they'd be upholding their commitments to MassCreative, the latter was rescheduled.)

Hennrikus says the attitude that arts aren't essential must be combated. "Arts are not extra. They're not nice; they're necessary," she says. "They're an integral part of everything else from housing to community building to education. We need to step up and make sure people understand that, and here's an opportunity."

Still, the conversation doesn't live and die by the upcoming election. "The mayor's race is important, but next year we have a governor's race," Hennrikus points out. "This is a conversation we need to have in every town and city in the entire state and the region. We need to tell people this has value." ◆

Shell-Shocked

SUMMER'S DWINDLING, but we've consoled ourselves with this fact: Cooler waters mean meatier, tastier oysters. And Legal Sea Foods is hosting its fifth annual Oyster Festival to celebrate the spoils of the season. The restaurants will unveil a special menu featuring rotating mollusk dishes such as an oyster stew, po-boys and jambalaya. For more experienced bivalve lovers, Legal hosts a handful of seafood-centric events, such as the Shellfish Shindig, a "shuck-out" of $1 oysters at the Charles Square location on Sept. 22, and a four-course oyster and craft beer dinner (appropriately dubbed an "Oyster Brewhaha") next month. Fall suddenly sounds a lot more appetizing. / Rima Butto

TAKING ON TRAGEDY

Fourteen years after the Columbine massacre, we can still only speculate why the events transpired the way they did. Based on interviews with survivors and adolescents across the country, Columbinus paints a picture of the circumstances surrounding the shocking high school shooting, connecting these testimonies with home-video footage and diary excerpts to illuminate the lives of American teenagers. This production looks back at the small Colorado community and lays the framework for the audience to ask, "Why?" TRAIN OF THOUGHT When two worlds collide on a train, you're in for an interesting ride. In Alfred Hitchcock's Oscar-nominated film noir Strangers on a Train, an unhinged socialite conspires to off his father without committing the crime himself. After offering to kill a stranger's wife in exchange for his dad's demise, he mistakes the man's hasty exit for an agreement. This 1950s psychological thriller follows the two men as one tries to commit the perfect murder and the other attempts to stay out of harm's way. As is true with all of Hitchcock's most memorable films, a strong cast and eerie visuals support the suspense. Hop on at the Harvard Film Archive on Sept. 20 and witness a train transaction gone awry. | Coryn Doncaster

2 Guns ★★★½ Probably the most purely enjoyable of this summer's popcorn pictures, this hilarious south of the border caper is a showcase for star wattage, with Denzel Washington as an undercover DEA agent working with Mark Wahlberg's naval intelligence officer to take down a Mexican drug cartel run by the always awesome Edward James Olmos. The only catch is that neither knows the other's secret, at least not before they accidentally rip off $42 million in cash from a secret CIA black-ops slush fund. Double crosses and betrayals abound, with a sadistic government assassin (Bill Paxton) leaving a pile of bodies behind him on their trail. Packed with loving references to the scummy '70s cinema of Sam Peckinpah and Don Siegel, 2 Guns capitalizes on chemistry. Denzel's unflappable, smooth talking jive makes a marvelous match for Wahlberg's bull in a china shop belligerence. Director Baltasar Kormákur has an expert eye for action sequences, but the real pleasure of 2 Guns is just watching the two leads bicker at each other. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

20 Feet From Stardom ★★★★ You sing along with them on the radio all the time, but I bet you've never even heard of these ladies. Morgan Neville's jubilant, long-overdue documentary moves the spotlight from center stage to the unheralded backup singers who have anonymously contributed to our pop-culture consciousness for the past 50-odd years. Darlene Love, whose voice defined Phil Spector's Wall of Sound, was taken advantage of by Spector's shockingly petty (and seemingly criminal) attempts to deny her recognition. Watch out for Merry Clayton, who showed up in a bathrobe with rollers in her hair in the middle of the night to wail on "Gimme Shelter" when the Stones were stuck in a rut. (The shot of Mick Jagger listening to her isolated vocal track is alone worth the price of admission.) Their stories are sad, as showbiz tales often are. But this funny, raucous party of a movie is a celebration, not just of wonderful music but of finally giving credit where it's due. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and West Newton.)

Ain't Them Bodies Saints ★★ There's a sparse, sad little crime drama buried somewhere inside writer-director David Lowery's debut feature, but it's hard to get a glimpse of it when the filmmaker's affectations keep getting in the way. Casey Affleck and Rooney Mara star as lovestruck Bonnie and Clyde types on the run in 1970s Texas, their vaguely explained spree coming to an abrupt halt in a shootout, after which Affleck's character takes the rap for her wounding a cop (Ben Foster). After four years in prison, Affleck escapes and embarks on a long journey home to reclaim his bride and the daughter he still hasn't met. Lowery cuts his scenes into self-conscious lyrical montages, ripping entire pages out of the Terrence Malick playbook and sending his talented cast wandering through sun-dappled fields of wheat. The cosmopolitan Mara is miscast as a bumpkin, but Affleck and Foster appear to be doing fine, understated work that's annoyingly obscured by all the aural and visual froufrou. No story could survive this molasses flood of mythic grandeur. (At Kendall Square and On Demand.)

The Attack ★★ Some husbands just don't pay attention. This glumly plodding Middle Eastern depress-o-rama stars Ali Suliman as a successful Arab surgeon living the high life in Tel Aviv, until the day his wife goes and blows herself up at a children's birthday party. Working from a book by Yasmina Khadra, director Ziad Doueiri drags our protagonist through the stages of denial, anger and acceptance. Suddenly shunned by Israeli society types, he heads for his hometown of Nablus to try to make sense of his wife's secret conversion from happy homemaker to radical terrorist. Constructed like a film-noir detective story on sleeping pills, The Attack is mostly Suliman wandering from one depressed location to another, hearing long-winded political talking points from all sides of the conflict. There's admirable attention to the details of daily life, but this kind of material is better suited for a novel. A movie needs a little more oomph than just watching somebody listen, especially an actor as sullen and poker-faced as Suliman. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Blue Jasmine ★★★ Woody Allen's 43rd feature has become a surprise late-summer breakout hit, and it's easy to see why. This is a handsomely crafted movie with some excellent performances and a structure that provides surprises. It's also a strange little duck, pitched nervously somewhere between tragedy and farce, existing in that refined, almost science-fiction universe where only Woody Allen characters reside. Allen's riffing on A Streetcar Named Desire here, and since Cate Blanchett played Blanche DuBois on Broadway, she's arrived ready and raring to go. Sometimes Blue Jasmine feels like a comedy, in which a condescending rich bitch finds her comeuppance in the working world. Welcome to the 99 percent, sweetheart. Yet there's such an anguish to Blanchett's performance that things never stay funny for very long. Of course, it must be noted that nobody goes to see a Woody Allen movie for nuanced portrayals of the underclass. Everything he knows about these people he learned from watching The Honeymooners, but I find something quaintly endearing about his cloistered 1950s sensibility. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Elysium ★ 1/2 Sneaking in under the wire to wrestle the award for this summer's most stupidly illogical screenplay away from Star Trek Into Darkness, director Neill Blomkamp's follow-up to 2009's nifty (if wildly over-praised) District 9 is a health care/immigration allegory that makes less sense the more you think about it. It's 2154 and the one-percenters have moved on up to a deluxe space station in the sky, leaving polluted, overpopulated Earth in the condition of a Rio de Janeiro favela. Matt Damon stars as an ex-con factory worker with a nasty case of radiation poisoning, attempting to crash the orbiting gated community for access to high-tech tanning beds that cure every illness. Jodie Foster is just awful as the hard-nosed homeland-security honcho barking orders to kill all the poor people with an accent from Planet Brando. Devoid of nuance, characterization or coherence, Elysium staggers from one arbitrary, unmotivated action sequence to another, and even Damon—normally the most reliable actor in movies—seems to lose interest about halfway through. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Fruitvale Station ★★★★ The shooting of unarmed 22-year-old Oscar Grant in the back by a Bay Area Rapid Transit police officer was a case that galvanized the public, with unnerving similarities to the recent George Zimmerman verdict. But this extraordinary debut film from writer-director Ryan Coogler leaves all that in the future, dialing back a day for a low-key, humanist portrait of the final 24 hours of Grant's life. It's a gentle film, with deep reservoirs of empathy and understanding. Fruitvale Station has a loose, hang-out vibe, following Grant around this Oakland community. Coogler is roughly the same age and from the Bay Area, which is probably why every detail in the picture feels so lived-in—and so right. Played in a brilliant, star-making turn by Michael B. Jordan, Grant's no angel, nor is he a martyr. It's a glimpse of one day in one life. Maybe it wasn't a remarkable life. But it was a life all the same, stupidly and tragically snuffed out. (At Kendall Square.)

Getaway ★ A 90-minute car chase in which you can't see anything that's happening, director Courtney Solomon's Getaway is an affront to the art of film editing. It's a mishmash of shots strewn together seemingly at random, discarding any sense of cinematic grammar and barely holding on an image for more than two or three seconds. Ethan Hawke stars as Brent Magna (great name!), a retired race car driver who comes home one Christmas night to find his wife has been kidnapped; a man with a silly accent is on the phone telling him to steal a souped-up Shelby Mustang Silver Snake and drive it through the city crashing into stuff, otherwise she's dead. For reasons too stupid to explain, Selena Gomez ends up riding shotgun. While they evade and destroy dozens upon dozens of police cars she pouts, complains and for all intents and purposes is required to narrate the action sequences because otherwise we wouldn't have any idea what the hell is going on. Come back, Dom Toretto! (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Grandmaster ★★★ Drastically re-edited for American release, complete with expository English-language title cards and a laughable promotional campaign with music by the Wu-Tang Clan, the great director Wong Kar-Wai's latest finally arrives on these shores as an awkward patchwork quilt. The true-life tale of Chinese martial-arts legend Ip Man (Tony Leung) spans decades and wars in a traditional biopic format, but there's a much dreamier, sadder Wong Kar-Wai movie clearly struggling to get out. As evidenced by masterpieces like In the Mood for Love and 2046, he's foremost a poet of heartbreak. So while these fight scenes are indeed intricately and gorgeously rendered, emphasizing precision over violence, there are also an awful lot of them. After much lurching about, The Grandmaster finally finds its soul in the second hour, settling into the unrequited love story between Leung and fellow exile Ziyi Zhang. Suddenly, we're back to Wong's period Hong Kong of lush surfaces, incandescent colors and feelings too fragile to be expressed. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema)

Kick-Ass 2 ★ 2010's Kick-Ass was a guilty pleasure that, to borrow a Mel Brooks quote, "rises below vulgarity." The deliriously violent tale of a teenage comic book geek (Aaron Taylor-Johnson) donning a scuba suit to fight crime was stolen outright by Nicolas Cage's cracked wannabe Batman and his potty-mouthed 11-year-old sidekick (Chloë Grace Moretz). Cage is dearly missed in this sorry sequel, as is the gonzo energy that made the first film so rudely entertaining. Recycling one joke to diminishing, snail-paced returns, this unnecessary rehash finds our title character targeted for revenge by Christopher Mintz-Plasse's lisping, bondage-clad villain, calling himself a name that cannot be printed in this magazine. Replacement director Jeff Wadlow is pathetically overeager to offend, wallowing in ugly dialogue that sounds like it was written by a stunted adolescent who just discovered curse words. Co-star Jim Carrey chose to disassociate himself from the film, citing a crisis of conscience after Newtown. But the problem isn't that Kick-Ass 2 is immoral; the problem is that it isn't funny. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Lee Daniels' The Butler ★★ 1/2 A silly copyright dispute required the director's name to appear in the official title, which is ironic because this is the least Lee Daniels-y movie that Lee Daniels has ever made. The maverick behind Precious and last year's blisteringly sleazy The Paperboy takes it down a few notches for this Oscar-baiting tale of a gentle White House butler (Forest Whitaker) who Forrest Gumps his way through a brief history of the Civil Rights movement and several celebrity-cameo presidential administrations. The starchy screenplay by Danny Strong is often thuddingly obvious, pitting most of the conflict between Whitaker's shy retiring servant and his firebrand Black Panther son (David Oyelowo). What makes it interesting is Daniels' raw sensibility chafing against the stuffy material, with lively performances from Oprah Winfrey as a gin-swilling unfaithful wife and Cuba Gooding Jr. as a sidekick with his mind in the gutter. The bizarre cast includes John Cusack as Richard Nixon, Jane Fonda as Nancy Reagan, and most hilariously, Liev Schreiber as Lyndon Johnson. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

Man of Steel ★★★ Brows furrowed when Dark Knight guru Christopher Nolan and Sucker Punch director Zack Snyder announced they were rebooting the saga of America's favorite illegal immigrant. I don't think anyone needs to see Kal-El conflicted with Batman's trendy neurosis. The drab color scheme and handheld photography feel like concessions to a fashionable "gritty" aesthetic, but otherwise I'm relieved to report that this is the same old Superman. Played with a wonderful, forthright decency by newcomer Henry Cavill, the Man of Tomorrow begins the film as an anonymous drifter, trying to hide his superpowers in a succession of go-nowhere jobs and dodging pesky Daily Planet reporter Lois Lane (Amy Adams). It's only when a crew of Kryptonian supervillains come threatening Armageddon that he finally busts out the cape and takes flight. The fractured flashback chronology is sometimes awkward, but Man of Steel boasts some terrific performances, particularly by Superman's two dads—Russell Crowe and Kevin Costner. The apocalyptic smackdowns suffer from CGI overload, but the movie is big-hearted and sincere. Just like its hero. (At Fenway.)

Pacific Rim ★★★½ The beguiling thing about Guillermo del Toro's Pacific Rim is just how well thought out it all is. Yes, we're talking about that movie in which skyscraper-sized robots fend off attacks from gigantic Godzilla monsters. It's a rock 'em-sock 'em display of mass destruction, but it has obviously been brooded over and mused upon for years by del Toro and his co-screenwriter, Travis Beacham. Pacific Rim exists in a complete, fully realized universe, which is a high compliment for a movie that also feels like it was dreamed up by an 8-year-old splashing around with toys in the bathtub. Dedicated to Ray Harryhausen and Ishiro Honda, it's madly in love with all those Creature Double Feature UHF-channel staples, ushering the man-in-lizard-suit kitsch into a new age of IMAX 3-D digital filmmaking technology. Del Toro has been missing from movies for five years, but he's back with a vengeance here, and his imagination clearly knows no bounds. There's a childlike glee to Pacific Rim. It's dumb fun done smart. (At Boston Common.)

Short Term 12 ★★★★ Roger Ebert once wrote that watching acts of kindness in movies always made him cry. I thought about that line a lot during this remarkable film from writer-director Destin Cretton, probably because it reduced me to a puddle somewhere around the 40-minute mark and I stayed that way for the duration. Based on the filmmaker's own experiences working in a foster-care facility, Short Term 12 follows a couple of 20-somethings who manage a temporary group home for at-risk kids. They're not therapists, more like baby sitters with infinite patience, and this funny, warm and wonderful movie depicts the way their typical workday swings from comedy to tragedy and back again. Brie Larson is a quiet revelation as the seemingly unflappable Grace, so capable of helping everybody except herself. John Gallagher Jr. is just as good as her co-worker and not-so-secret boyfriend, exuding goofy generosity. The film is so moving because there are no easy answers or pat resolutions, just good people trying to do the best that they can. (At Kendall Square.)

The Spectacular Now ★★½ Hard partying Sutter (Miles Teller) has never taken anything seriously, least of all himself. But on the verge of graduating high school he finds himself unexpectedly smitten with good girl Aimee (Shailene Woodley), a delicate wallflower who lives in a world beyond his circle of never-ending keggers. She tutors him in geometry; he teaches her how to drink. But do they have a future when Sutter only lives in the now? Based on the young adult novel by Tim Tharp, The Spectacular Now is gentle, exceedingly well-acted and directed with tact and restraint by James Ponsoldt. Some folks are already calling it a coming of-age classic. But I couldn't get past the cloddish screenplay by (500) Days of Summer writers Scott Neustadter and Michael H. Weber, which reiterates and underlines the themes in bright red, then spells them out again just in case anybody missed anything. Take a drink every time these characters deliver monologues about "living in the now," and you'll be in worse shape than the alcoholics onscreen. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

The Wolverine ★★ 1/2 Few films fall apart as spectacularly in their third act as this second attempt to give Hugh Jackman's knuckle-knived berserker a stand-alone franchise apart from his mutant X-Men pals. This time around he's on the run through the Far East, protecting an heiress (Tao Okamoto) marked for death by the Yakuza, various ninjas and a few rotten relatives. What makes The Wolverine so refreshing for so long is its smallness of scale. There's no apocalyptic CGI grandeur, just a lot of close-quartered fights full of sharp, pointy objects. Journeyman director James Mangold hews to clean compositions, clearly defined action geography and striking use of the Japanese locations. It's tightly focused, even intimate by comic book standards. Until all of a sudden, it isn't anymore. The film's final segment retreats to a generic industrial space for a cacophony of preposterous plot twists and weightless computer-generated destruction, complete with the now obligatory midcredits teaser for the next installment. Such a shame, as this was almost a real movie. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The World's End ★★ Critics aren't supposed to admit such things, but we all have aesthetic blind spots. It's part of the human condition. Not everything works for everybody, particularly when it comes to comedy. Director Edgar Wright and his frequent collaborators Simon Pegg and Nick Frost are revered as gods in many circles, telling tales of stunted, funny men dragged kicking and screaming toward adulthood thanks to the outside interference of popular genre-film conventions. 2004's Shaun of the Dead was a promising debut, with two slackers on the margins of a zombie apocalypse. Less so was 2007's Hot Fuzz, a goof on buddy-cop cliches, and now The World's End did nothing for me at all. Pegg stars as a bleary drunkard dragging his middle-aged friends to re-enact a pub crawl from their teens, only to discover their hometown has been taken over by alien robots. I guess I'm just tired of the routine, respecting Wright's carefully rhyming compositions and frenetic editing without enjoying them very much at all. Your personal mileage may vary. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

MUSIC

ON THE ROAD AGAIN

If you're hungry for a buffet of jazz, soul and rock tunes, Steely Dan has got you covered. After 40 years, the group has amassed quite the musical résumé: seven platinum albums, multiple Grammy Awards and an induction into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. And even though they are staples of classic-rock radio, don't call them dinosaurs. This duo has served up some delicious concerts in the past decade, and when their Mood Swings tour comes to town, it will mark their seventh stop in Boston in the past 10 years. Feed your soul on Sept. 24 at the Citi Wang Theatre. Nick Hansen

Edited by Sarah Hagman

SUN EXPOSURES Hold on to the lingering memories of sweet summertime while you can. With crisp photographs weaving from one relaxing moment to the next, What I Did on My Summer Vacation surveys the season starting Sept. 12. Photographer Brett Henrikson ventured to Death Valley, where he captured the national park's grandeur and a sign stating the obvious in his image In Case You Weren't Sure. Other artists trained their lenses on swimming pools and playgrounds, motels and minnow hunts, shirtless concert-goers and sweating street vendors. Relive the summer months—even while sporting scarves and mittens—at the Panopticon Gallery through January. / Maria Scenna

OUR FEATURE WRITER/SOCIAL COLUMNIST JONATHAN SOROFF'S NEW BOO

Desiree Grabowski is an unscrupulous, social-climbing parasite, married to one of New York's richest lawyers. At the hair salon, she meets the mysterious Alta Monte di'Soldi, an Italian countess with a shadowy past. Meanwhile, Desiree's Central American housekeeper, Ita, lives in abject terror of being deported but demonstrates a genius for fashion design that catches the countess' eye. Together, the three create a fashion empire and then fight over control of it.

LAWS OF LOVE

West Newton native Sara Farizan gives readers an intimate peek at the problems gay people face in Iranian culture in her debut novel, If You Could Be Mine. Originally started as Farizan's master's thesis, the story sheds light on the dangers faced by the gay community in Iran through the experiences of two teenage girls, Sahar and Nasrin. In their clandestine love story, readers get an eye-opening look at life in Tehran, where openly gay relationships are punishable by prison, corporal punishment or death and sexual identities must be kept secret. She appears at the Harvard Book Store on Sept. 17. / Keir Cullen Janey
